

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

ALA4125.147.5

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY

The Gift of

Mr. & Mrs. Henry Herrick Bond of Waltham, Massachusetts

CALIBAN

BY THE YELLOW SANDS

A COMMUNITY
MASQUE

BY
PERCY MACKAYE

WORKS BY PERCY MACKAYE

DRAMAS

THE CANTERBURY PILGRIMS. A Comedy.
JEANNE D'ARC. A Tragedy.
SAPPHO AND PHAON. A Tragedy.
FENRIS THE WOLF. A Tragedy.
A GARLAND TO SYLVIA. A Dramatic Reverie.
THE SCARECROW. A Tragedy of the Ludicrous.
YANKEE FANTASIES. Five One-act Plays.
MATER. An American Study in Comedy.
ANTI-MATRIMONY. A Satirical Comedy.
TO-MORROW. A Play in Three Acts.
A THOUSAND YEARS AGO. A Romance of the Orient.
THE IMMIGRANTS. A Lyric Drama.

MASQUES

CALIBAN. A Community Masque.
SAINT LOUIS. A Civic Masque.
SANCTUARY. A Bird Masque.
THE NEW CITIZENSHIP. A Civic Ritual.

POEMS

THE SISTINE EVE, and Other Poems.
URIEL, and Other Poems.
LINCOLN. A Centenary Ode.
THE PRESENT HOUR.
POEMS AND PLAYS. In Two Volumes.

ESSAYS

THE PLAYHOUSE AND THE PLAY.
THE CIVIC THEATRE.
A SUBSTITUTE FOR WAR.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

Uniform with this volume

SAINT LOUIS: A CIVIC MASQUE

AS ENACTED BY 7,000 CITIZENS OF SAINT LOUIS

CALIBAN

CALIBAN

BY THE YELLOW SANDS

BY

PERCY MACKAYE

NEW EDITION
(22nd Thousand)

GARDEN CITY NEW YORK
DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & COMPANY

1917

~~HAL 2419.3.70.5~~
~~ALA 4125.147.5~~

HARVARD COLLEGE LIBRARY
GIFT OF
MR. & MRS. HENRY H. BOND
AUGUST 31, 1933

Copyright, 1916, by
PERCY MACKAYE

All rights reserved, including that of translation into foreign languages, including the Scandinavian

All acting rights, and motion picture rights, are reserved by the author in the United States, Great Britain and countries of the copyright Union

No public reading of this Masque, and no performance of it, may be given without the written permission of the author, who should be addressed in care of the publishers.

33 513
51

*"Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands!"*

THE TEMPEST.

CALIBAN

BY THE YELLOW SANDS

A COMMUNITY MASQUE

Of the Art of the Theatre

Devised and Written to Commemorate the Tercentenary of the Death of SHAKESPEARE

Illustrations by

Joseph Urban & Robert Edmond Jones

LIST OF ILLUSTRATIONS

FACING PAGE

Ground Plan for Auditorium (with Stages of Masque Proper and Interludes) by Joseph Urban	xxxiv
Inner Structure of Masque (Chart) By Percy MacKaye	154
A Community Masque Audience (Photograph) By E. O. Thalinger	156
Community Masque Organization Plan (Chart) By Hazel MacKaye	158

CONTENTS

	PAGE
FOREWORD TO THE NEW EDITION	xi
PREFACE	xvii
MASQUE STRUCTURE	xxxiii
PERSONS AND PRESENCES	xxxvii
FIRST INTERLUDE	32
ACT I	34
SECOND INTERLUDE	76
ACT II	78
THIRD INTERLUDE	110
ACT III.	111
EPILOGUE	142
APPENDIX	147

FOREWORD TO THE NEW EDITION

AT THE request of the Caliban Committee of Greater Boston, who have informed me of their immediate need of copies of this Masque for participants in their forthcoming production of it in Boston next June, I write this foreword to a new edition in order to make clear a few points needful to touch upon.

This new edition comprises practically the same text as that of the first edition used in the first production of "Caliban" at New York in May, 1916. The few differences consist chiefly in the omission of certain printed announcements which concerned only plans of the New York production, and the omission of certain described aspects of the Epilogue which were merely preliminary and never actually applied.

This edition, however, does not comprise the exact text of the Masque in the form in which it will be presented newly in Boston next June. It does not constitute "The New Caliban," which I have revised and reconstructed to meet the new problems and purposes of its post-tercentenary production in Boston and elsewhere.

For it would be impossible to publish the correct text of the new "Caliban" without making from fresh plates an entirely new volume—a procedure which would involve a delay undesired by the Boston Committee. But it would be impossible besides, because—in the nature of the case—numerous details of the new "Caliban" can only be finally determined upon by necessary experimentation which will take place during preparations for the June production.

Some text of the Masque, however, being required for use this Spring by the large number of Boston participants and by the general public, the text here published will serve to give every participant and reader a perfectly just idea of the Masque in its main constructive features (except one or two soon to be noted), and in the many details which will remain unchanged.

In this Foreword I have not the intention or opportunity fully to set forth the nature and the causes of the changes made by me, in text and structure, which will contribute to make the new "Caliban." I will note here only a very few essentials.

First, then, the form of the new "Caliban," will be not farther from my original conception of the Masque, but nearer to it. Originally I conceived this Masque as a new order of dramatic work, which I named community drama, because it involves structurally the focussed participation of large numbers of amateurs drawn from community groups. In short, I conceived it as a community drama upon an elemental theme—the growth of man from his primitive beginnings.

Since, however, that theme had—for the purposes of my commission in 1916—to subserve the various objects of the Shakespeare Tercentenary in New York, the problem of relating my theme intimately not only to Shakespeare and his works, but necessarily as well to the particular plans of the Tercentenary Celebration, became one of considerable complexity.

To mention but one of the 1916 Tercentenary objects necessary to solve, it was needful for this Masque to provide, in brief time and focussed space, as large a number as possible of important Shakespearian parts for eminent professional actors and actresses to interpret. Hence, I devised the "Inner Scenes," as here published, scenes which, of course, Shakespeare did not originally conceive to be spoken on an immense outdoor scale, yet which eminent Shakespearian actors would hardly have consented to act in pantomime. The words of my own text in this volume have, for the most part, been carefully intended for the large outdoor scale, whereas those of Shakespeare in the Inner Scenes were not so intended.

Now, however, the Tercentenary has passed, and this particular problem, with numerous others, no longer presents itself. In brief, the Tercentenary Masque is now free to become simply the Community Drama of my theme.

In the new "Caliban," therefore, there will be no spoken Inner Scenes from Shakespeare in the form here published, but instead these structural elements of the Masque will have the dramatic form of my original intent—the form of visions (conjured by Prospero for the education of "Caliban"), the illusion of which is appropriately devised by the pictorial and plastic effects of light and darkness upon tableaux and pantomime under the spell of music. These visions, moreover, will not take place in the inner recess behind "The Cloudy Curtain," but will be brought forward nearer to the audience and so will be placed in plastic relation to the reactions of "Caliban" to them. Thus the spoken "Inner Scenes" will be transformed to outer visions chiefly pantomimic—a change from the Tercentenary form of this Masque, which will greatly reduce the total acting time, and so leave more time for needful emphasis on community mass action.

These individual Shakespearian visions, however, are not the only visions conjured by Prospero for their effect on the growing soul of Caliban. Prospero conjures also the communal visions of the historical art of the theatre which constitute the Interludes. These Interludes, therefore, exist dramatically for their effect on the development of Caliban, and this their direct relation to Caliban (as well as, in less degree, to Prospero and Ariel) will, I trust, be emphasized by the new devices in stage management of the Interludes planned for the performances in Boston and hereafter.

To the spectator of a Masque like this, it need hardly be said that the visual art of the producer, in stage management, lighting, color, massing, and movement, is an immense factor of that illusion which casts its spell upon the spectator's actual presence at a performance.

As for the reader, however, it is well perhaps to remind him that a Masque such as this, though published, can essentially have no readers, save those who are imaginatively spectators and listeners.

Listeners, let me add, quite as emphatically as spectators; moreover, not simply listeners to the dramatic poet through the spoken art of the actor, but also to the composer, through the arts of orchestral and choral music.

For this textual structure of "Caliban" is but a portion of itself without the music of Mr. Arthur Farwell, with whom I have been very happily in coöperation from the work's beginning. The nobly appealing qualities of his compositions were widely attested at the New York production. His orchestral scores for this Masque have not yet been published, but his music to the lyric choruses may be had of John Church Co., New York. Mr. Farwell is also preparing new compositions in music for the fresh requirements of the new "Caliban."

The genius of Mr. Robert Edmond Jones as an artist of the theatre, which contributed so much of beauty and vitality to the production in New York, is fortunately being devoted as well to the Boston production, the directorship of which is in the admirably executive hands of Mr. Frederick Stanhope.

Circumstances of health and absence from New England have prevented my being in as close personal touch as I could have wished with the organization of the Boston production, which has come into being through the earnest and sympathetic initiative of Mr. B. S. Pouzzner of that city. The splendid community spirit of the citizens' Committee of Greater Boston is already apparent in the cordial endorsement and coöperation enlisted from the city's Mayor and from the Governor of Massachusetts.

To all concerned I would like here to express my own very hearty good will and the deep-felt hope that "Caliban" may serve in Boston, as elsewhere, the great cause of community solidarity so crucially important to our country in this momentous time.

PERCY MACKAYE.

Palm Beach, Florida,
31 March, 1917.

PREFACE

Three hundred years alive on the 23rd of April, 1916, the memory of Shakespeare calls creatively upon a self-destroying world to do him honor by honoring that world-constructive art of which he is a master architect.

Over seas, the choral hymns of cannon acclaim his death; in battle-trenches artists are turned subtly ingenious to inter his art; War, Lust, and Death are risen in power to restore the primeval reign of Setebos.

Here in America, where the neighboring waters of his "vexed Bermoothes" lie more calm than those about his own native isle, here only is given some practical opportunity for his uninterable spirit to create new splendid symbols for peace through harmonious international expression.

As one means of serving such expression, and so, if possible, of paying tribute to that creative spirit in forms of his own art, I have devised and written this Masque, at the invitation of the Shakespeare Celebration Committee of New York City.

The dramatic-symbolic motive of the Masque I have taken from Shakespeare's own play "The Tempest,"

Act I, Scene 2. There, speaking to Ariel, Prospero says:

“Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop? . . . This damn’d witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing . . . was hither brought with child
And there was left by the sailors. Thou . . .
Wast then her servant;
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthly and abhorred commands,
Refusing her grand hests, she did confine thee,
By help of her most potent ministers
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine, within which rift
Imprisoned thou didst painfully remain . . .
Then was this island—
Save for the son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp hag-born—not honor’d with
A human shape . . . that Caliban
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know’st
What torment I did find thee in, . . . it was a torment
To lay upon the damn’d . . . It was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine and let thee out.”

“It was mine art” . . . There—in Prospero’s words [and Shakespeare’s]—is the text of this Masque.

The art of Prospero I have conceived as the art of Shakespeare in its universal scope: that many-visioned art of the theatre which, age after age, has come to liberate the imprisoned imagination of mankind from the fetters of brute force and ignorance; that same art which, being usurped or stifled by groping part-knowledge, prudery, or lust, has been botched in its ideal aims and—like fire ill-handled or ill-hidden by a passionate child—has wrought havoc, hypocrisy, and decadence.

Caliban, then, in this Masque, is that passionate child-curious part of us all [whether as individuals or as races], grovelling close to his aboriginal origins, yet groping up and staggering—with almost rhythmic falls and back-slidings—toward that serener plane of pity and love, reason and disciplined will, where Miranda and Prospero commune with Ariel and his Spirits.

In deference to the master-originator of these characters and their names, it is, I think, incumbent on me to point out that these four characters, derived—but reimagined—from Shakespeare's "The Tempest," become, for the purposes of my Masque, the presiding symbolic Dramatis Personæ of a plot and conflict which are my own conception. They are thus no longer Shakespeare's characters of "The Tempest," though born of them and bearing their names.

Their words [save for a very few song-snatches and sentences] and their actions are those which I have given them; the development of their characters accords with the theme—not of Shakespeare's play but of this Masque, in which Caliban's nature is developed to become the protagonist of aspiring humanity, not simply its butt of shame and ridicule.

My conception and treatment also of Setebos [whose name is but a passing reference in Shakespeare's play], the fanged idol [substituted by me for the "cloven pine"]; of Sycorax, as Setebos' mate [in form a super-puppet, an earth-spirit rather than "witch"], from both of whom Caliban has sprung; of the Shakespearian Inner Scenes, as brief-flashing visions in the mind of Prospero; of the "Yellow Sands" as his magic isle, the world; these are not liberties taken with text or characters of Shakespeare; they are simply the means of dramatic license whereby my Masque aims to accord its theme with the art and spirit of Shakespeare.

Shakespeare's own characters, that use his words¹ in scenes of his plays, have then no part in my Masque, except in the Inner Scenes,² where they are conceived as being conjured by Prospero and enacted by the Spirits of Ariel.

¹The words of Shakespeare used in this Masque, are quoted from the Tudor Edition of Shakespeare's Works, edited by Neilson and Thorndike (Macmillan). The stage directions and cuts, however, are not taken from any edition, but have been made by me for purposes of the Inner Scenes.

²In this book these Inner Scenes are printed in black-faced type.

The theme of the Masque—Caliban seeking to learn the art of Prospero—is, of course, the slow education of mankind through the influences of coöperative art, that is, of the art of the theatre in its full social scope. This theme of coöperation is expressed earliest in the Masque through the lyric of Ariel's Spirits taken from "The Tempest"; it is sounded, with central stress, in the chorus of peace when the kings clasp hands on the Field of the Cloth of Gold;¹ and, with final emphasis, in the gathering together of the creative forces of dramatic art in the Epilogue. Thus its motto is the one printed on the title page, in Shakespeare's words:

"Come unto these yellow sands
And then take hands."

So much for my Masque in its relationship to Shakespeare's work and his art. Its contribution to the modern development of a form of dramatic art unpractised by him requires some brief comment.

This work is not a pageant, in the sense that the festivals excellently devised by Mr. Louis N. Parker in England, Mr. Lascelles in Canada, or Mr. Thomas Wood Stevens in America have been called pageants. Though of necessity it involves aspects of pageantry, its form is more closely related to the forms of Greek drama and of opera. Yet it is neither of these. It is a new form to meet new needs.

¹This is the motive of Mr. Robert Edmond Jones' cover design for this volume.

I have called this work a Masque, because—like other works so named in the past—it is a dramatic work of symbolism involving, in its structure, pageantry, poetry, and the dance. Yet I have by no means sought to relate its structure to an historic form; I have simply sought by its structure to solve a modern [and a future] problem of the art of the theatre. That problem is the new one of creating a focussed dramatic technique for the growing but groping movement vaguely called “pageantry,” which is itself a vital sign of social evolution—the half-desire of the people not merely to remain receptive to a popular art created by specialists, but to take part themselves in creating it; the desire, that is, of democracy consistently to seek expression through a drama of and by the people, not merely for the people.

For some ten years that potential drama of democracy has interested me as a fascinating goal for both dramatist and citizen, in seeking solution for the vast problem of leisure.¹ Two years ago at Saint Louis I had my first technical opportunity, on a large scale, to experiment in devising a dramatic structure for its many-sided requirements. There, during five performances, witnessed by half a million people, about seven thousand citizens of Saint Louis took part in my Masque [in association with the Pageant by Thomas Wood Stevens]. In the appendix of this volume a photograph gives a suggestion of one of those audiences, gathered in their public park [in seats half of which were free, half pay-seats] to witness the production.¹

¹An outline of suggestions on this subject I published in a volume, “The Civic Theatre, in Relation to the Redemption of Leisure” [1912]. Further ideas and their applications are contained in the prefaces and dramatic texts of my Bird Masque “Sanctuary,” “Saint Louis: A Civic Masque,” and “The New Citizenship,” a Civic Ritual.

That production was truly a drama of, for, and by the people—a true Community Masque; and it was largely with the thought of that successful civic precedent that the Shakespeare Celebration first looked to Central Park as the appropriate site to produce their Community Festival, the present Masque, as the central popular expression of some hundreds of supplementary Shakespearean celebrations.

In so doing, they conceived the function of a public park—as it is conceived almost universally west of the Eastern States, and almost everywhere in Europe—to be that of providing outdoor space for the people's expression in civic art-forms.

The sincere opposition of a portion of the community to this use of Central Park would never, I think, have arisen, if New York could have taken counsel with Saint ¹The outgoing cost of the Saint Louis production was $122,000; the income $139,000. The balance of $17,000 has been devoted to a fund for civic art. The cost of producing a single play by Sophocles at Athens was $500,000.

Louis's experience, and its wonderfully happy civic and social reactions. The opposition, however, was strong and conscientious; so that, on the same principle of community solidarity which was the raison d'être for their informal application to use Central Park, the Shakespeare Celebration withdrew their wish to use it. To split community feeling by acrimonious discussion was contrary to the basic idea and function of the Celebration, which are to help unite all classes and all beliefs in a great coöperative movement for civic expression through dramatic art.

One very important public service, however, was performed by this Central Park discussion; it served clearly to point out a colossal lack in the democratic equipment of the largest and richest metropolis of the western hemisphere: namely, the total lack of any public place of meeting, where representative numbers of New York citizens can unite in seeing, hearing, and taking part in a festival or civic communion of their own. New York, a city of five million inhabitants, possesses no public stadium or community theatre. Little Athens, a mere village in comparison, had for its heart such a community theatre, which became the heart of civilization. Without such an instrument, our own democracy cannot hope to develop that coöperative art which is the expression of true civilization in all ages.

Happily for the Shakespeare Celebration and its aims, a large measure of solution has, at the date of this preface, been attained by the gracious offer of the New York City College authorities, through President Mezes, to permit the use of the Lewisohn Stadium and athletic field, temporarily to be converted into a sort of miniature Yale Bowl, for the production of the Shakespeare Masque on the night of May 23rd and the following four nights.

By the brilliant conception and technical plans of Mr. Joseph Urban for joining to the present concrete stadium of Mr. Arnold Brunner its duplicate in wood, on the east side of the field, and so placing the stage on its narrower width to the north, there will be created a practical outdoor theatre, remarkable in acoustics, qualified to accommodate in excellent seats about twenty thousand spectators, and some two or three thousand participants in the festival.

If such a consummation shall eventually become permanent there, it will complete the realization of a practicable dream already rendered partly complete by Mr. Adolf Lewisohn's public-spirited donation of the present concrete structure. Referring to that practicable dream, I wrote four years ago in my volume "The Civic Theatre":¹ "One day last spring, traversing with President John Finley the grounds lately appropriated, through his fine efforts, by the City of New York for a great stadium at the City College, I discussed with him the splendid opportunity there presented for focussing the popular enthusiasm toward athletic games in an art dramatic and nobly spectacular."

¹Page 71, on Constructive Leisure (Mitchell Kennerley, 1912).

This new dramatic art-form, then—a technique of the theatre adapted to democratic expression and dedicated to public service—I have called by the name Community Masque, and have sought to exemplify it on a large scale in two instances, at Saint Louis and at New York.

The occasion of this preface is not one to discuss the details of that new technique further than to suggest to the public, and to those critics who might be interested to make its implications clearer than the author and director of a production has time or opportunity to do, that the exacting time limits of presenting dramatically a theme involving many dissociated ages, through many hundreds of symbolic participants and leaders, are conditions which themselves impel the imagination toward creating a technique as architectural as music, as colorful as the pageant, as dramatic as the play, as plastic as the dance.

That my own work has attained to such a technique I am very far from supposing. I have, however, clearly seen the need for attaining to it, whatever the difficulties, if a great opportunity for democracy is not to be lost. To see that much, at a time when the vagueness of amateurs, however idealistic in desire, is obscuring the austere outlines of a noble technical art looming just beyond us, may perhaps be of some service.

As visual hints to the structure (Inner and Outer) of the present Masque, the charts here published may be suggestive to the reader. To the reader as such it remains to point out one vital matter of technique, namely, the relation of the dramatic dialogue to the Masque's production.

Even more than a play [if more be possible], a Masque is not a realized work of art until it is adequately produced. To the casual reader, this Masque, as visualized merely on these printed pages, may appear to be a structure simply of written words: in reality it is a structure of potential interrelated pantomime, music, dance, lighting, acting, song [choral and lyric], scene values, stage management and spoken words.

Words spoken, then, constitute in this work but one of numerous elements, all relatively important. If no word of the Masque be heard by the audience, the plot, action, and symbolism will still remain understandable and, if properly produced, dramatically interesting. Synchronous with every speech occur, in production, effects of pantomime, lighting, music, and movement with due proportion and emphasis. Such, at least, is the nature of the technique sought, whether or not this particular work attains to it.

A Masque must appeal as emphatically to the eye as a moving picture, though with a different appeal to the imagination.

Because of this only relative value of the spoken word, there are many producers [theoretical and practical] who believe that the spoken word should be eliminated entirely from this special art of the theatre.

Artists as eminent and constructive in ideas as Gordon Craig, and many whom his genius has inspired, advocate indeed this total elimination of speech from the theatre's art as a whole. For them that art ideally is the compound of only light and music and movement. The reason for this, I think, is because the sensibility of those artists is preëminently visual. Moreover, they are relatively inexpert, as artists, in the knowledge of the technique and values of the spoken word. Being visually expert and creative, they have, by their practical genius, established a world-wide school of independent visual art [assisted only by mass sounds of music].

For them this art has well nigh become the art of the theatre. Yet it is not so, I think, and can never be so, to that watching and listening sensibility for which all dramatic art is created—the soul of the audience. That soul, our soul, is a composite flowering of all the senses, and the life-long record of the spoken word [reiterated from childhood] is an integral, yes, the most intimate, element of our consciousness.

The association of ideas and emotions which only the spoken word can evoke is, therefore, a dramatic value which the art of the theatre cannot consistently ignore. It is chiefly because those artist-experts in word values, the poets, who might contribute their special technique to the theatre's art, turn elsewhere creatively, that the field is left unchallenged and open to the gifted school of the visualists. The true dramatic art—which involves ideally a total coöperation—does not, and cannot, exclude the poet-dramatist. Shakespeare and Sophocles lived before electric light; if they had lived after, they would have set a different pace for Bakst and Reinhardt, and established a creative school more nobly poised in technique, more deeply human in appeal.

Now, therefore, when the poets are awaking to a new power and control of expression, here especially in our own country, if they will both learn and teach in this larger school, there rises before us the promise of an art more sensuous, sane, and communal than the theatre has ever known.

So, in the pioneering adventure of this Masque, which seeks by experiment to relate the spoken word to its larger coöperation with the visual arts, I have devised a structure in which the English language, spoken by actors, is an essential dramatic value.

Why, then, take pains [as I have done] to make it relatively non-essential in case it should not be heard?

For this reason: that now—at the present temporary with officers of the Drama League for making known its availability as stated in their announcement printed at the back of this volume.

The accompanying stage-designs are the work of Mr. Joseph Urban, the eminent Viennese artist and producer [who has recently become an American], and of Mr. Robert Edmond Jones, designer of the scenes and costumes for Mr. Granville Barker's production of "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife."

At the date of this preface, Mr. Arthur Farwell has nearly completed his compositions for the lyric choruses and incidental music of the Masque. The choruses will shortly be made available, published by G. Schirmer, New York.

With all three of these artists I am fortunate in being associated in preparations for the Masque's New York production next May.

These preparations have met with many complex difficulties of launching and organization; the time remaining is very brief to accomplish the many-sided community task for which the Masque is designed; only the merest beginnings of so vast a movement can be attempted; but, with coöperation and support from those who believe in that task, the producers look forward hopefully to serving, in some pioneering degree, the great cause of community expression through the art of the theatre.

PERCY MACKAYE.

New York, February 22, 1916.

MASQUE STRUCTURE

THE ACTION

The action takes place, symbolically, on three planes: [1] in the cave of Sebetos [before and after its transformation into the theatre of Prospero]; [2] in the mind of Prospero [behind the Cloudy Curtains of the inner stage]; and [3] on the ground-circle of "the Yellow Sands" [the place of historic time].

THE TIME

The Masque Proper is concerned, symbolically, with no literal period of time, but with the waxing and waning of the life of dramatic art [and its concomitant, civilization] from primitive barbaric times to the verge of the living present.

The Interludes are concerned with ritualistic glimpses of the art of the theatre [in its widest, communal scope] during three historical periods: [1] Antiquity, [2] the Middle Ages, and [3] Elizabethan England.

The Epilogue is concerned with the creative forces of dramatic art from antiquity to the present, and—by suggestion—with the future of those forces.

THE SETTING

The setting of the entire Masque is architectural and scenic, not a background of natural landscape as in the case of most outdoor pageants. Being constructed technically for performance, on a large scale, by night only, its basic appeals are to the eye, through expert illusions of light and darkness, architectural and plastic line, the dance, color, and pageantry of group movements; to the ear, through invisible choirs and orchestra, stage instrumental music and voices of visible mass-choruses [in the Interludes only].

As indicated by the accompanying diagram [Time Chart]* of its Inner Structure, the Masque Proper is enacted by a comparatively few [about thirty] professional actors, who use the spoken word to motivate the large-scale pantomime of their action; the Interludes [which use no spoken word, but only dance, pageantry, miming, and choruses] are performed by community participants [to the number of thousands]; the Epilogue utilizes both kinds of performers.

Corresponding to this Inner Structure, the Outer Structure consists of three architectural planes or acting stages [all interdependent]: [1] a modified form of Elizabethan stage, [here called "the Middle Stage—B"] consisting of a raised platform [to which steps lead up from a ground-circle, eight feet below] provided with a smaller, curtained Inner Stage [A—under a balcony, on which the upper visions appear, and above which the concealed orchestra and choirs are located]. This Inner Stage is two feet higher than the Middle Stage, from which ramps lead up to it. Shutting it off from the other, its "Cloudy Curtains," when closed, meet at the centre; when they are open, the inner Shakespearean scenes [visions in the mind of Prospero] are then revealed within.

Between the raised Middle Stage and the audience lies the Ground-Circle—in form like the "orchestra" of a Greek theatre. Here the community Interludes take place around a low central Altar, from which rises a great hour-glass, flowing with luminous sands. This ground-circle is the place of the Yellow Sands, the outer wave-lines of which are bordered by the deep blue of the space beyond. The circle itself, representing the magic isle of Prospero [the temporal place of his art], is mottled with shadowy contours of the continents of the world.

Beneath the middle stage, and between the broad spaces of the steps which lead up to it from the ground-circle, is situated, at centre, the mouth of Caliban's cell, which thus opens directly upon the Yellow Sands.

All of these features of the setting, however, are invisible when the Masque begins, and are only revealed as the lightings of the action disclose them.

*See Appendix, page 154.

GROUND-PLAN FOR AUDITORIUM AND STAGE OF SHAKESPEARE MASQUE.

A - CENTER STAGE. B - MIDDLE STAGE. C - OUTER STAGE. (SEE THE YELLOW LAMINAE)
A - CENTER STAGE. B - MIDDLE STAGE. C - OUTER STAGE. (SEE THE YELLOW LAMINAE)
A - CENTER STAGE. B - MIDDLE STAGE. C - OUTER STAGE. (SEE THE YELLOW LAMINAE)

PERSONS AND PRESENCES

I. OF THE MASQUE PROPER¹

SPEAKING PERSONS

ARIEL

SYCORAX²

CALIBAN

PROSPERO

MIRANDA

LUST

DEATH

WAR

CALIGULA [Impersonated by Lust]

ONE IN GRAY [Impersonated by Death]

ANOTHER IN GRAY [Impersonated by Caliban]

MUTE PRESENCES

SETEBOS³

CHORAL PRESENCES

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

POWERS OF SETEBOS

PANTOMIME GROUPS

LUST GROUP

DEATH GROUP

WAR GROUP

ROMAN GROUP

THE ONES IN GRAY

TRANSFORMATION CHOIR

GREGORIAN CHOIR

THE ONES IN GREEN

THE NINE MUSES

RENAISSANCE FAUNS

} Impersonated by the Powers of Setebos

} Impersonated by the Spirits of Ariel

¹The Masque Proper consists of the Prologue and Three Acts, without the Inner Scenes and the Epilogue and Interludes.

²Visualized by a Super-puppet.

³Visualized by an idol.

II. OF THE TEN INNER-STAGE SCENES

[Enacted by the Spirits of Ariel.]

SEE APPENDIX: Pages 159-161.

Of these scenes eight are spoken scenes taken from plays of Shakespeare; one (the sixth) is a⁴ pantomime devised from a descriptive speech in "Henry the Eighth," Act I, Scene I; one (the fourth) is a tableau scene symbolic of the early Christian Church. Those taken from Shakespeare are printed in black-faced type.

III. OF THE INTERLUDES

SEE APPENDIX: Pages 162, 166, 172, 184, 187, 190, 195.

IV. OF THE EPILOGUE

SPEAKING PERSONS

THE SPIRIT OF TIME

SHAKESPEARE [as Prospero]

PANTOMIME GROUPS*

THEATRES [with Musicians, Dancers, Designers, Producers, Inventors etc.: Creators of the art of the theatre]

ACTORS

DRAMATISTS

SPIRIT TRUMPETERS [Announcers of the Groups]

*See Appendix: Pages 207-216.

CALIBAN

CALIBAN

PROLOGUE

The action begins in semi-darkness, out of which sound invisible choirs.

The scene is the cave of SETEBOS, whose stark-colored idol—half tiger and half toad—colossal and primitive—rises at centre above a stone altar.

On the right, the cave leads inward to the abode of SYCORAX; on the left, it leads outward to the sea, a blue-green glimpse of which is vaguely visible.

High in the tiger-jaws of the idol, ARIEL—a slim, winged figure, half nude—is held fettered.

In the dimness, he listens to deep-bellowing choirs from below, answered by a chorus of sweet shrill voices from within.

THE VOICES FROM BELOW

[Sing.]

Setebos! Setebos!

THE VOICES FROM WITHIN

[Sing.]

Ariel!

CALIBAN

ARIEL

[Calls aloud.]

O, my brave spirits!

THE VOICES FROM BELOW

Setebos! Setebos!

Over us which art, and under:

Fang of fire

From mouth of thunder!

Hungering goad

From belly of mire!

Tiger and toad—

Setebos!

Blood which art on the jungle bloom,

Sloth and slumber and seed in the womb:

Which art wondrous

Over and under us,

Setebos! Setebos! Thou art Setebos!

THE VOICES FROM WITHIN

Sealed in a starless cell,

We are shut from dawn and sky.

Ariel!—Ariel!

Why?

ARIEL

Setebos knows, but his jaws

Fetter me fast: he is dumb—

Answering never.

THE VOICES FROM WITHIN

We, who parch for dew and star—

Ariel!—Ariel!—

Must we perish where we are?

Tell!

ARIEL

Sycorax knows, but she sits

There in the cave with her son—

Mocking us ever.

THE VOICES FROM WITHIN

Ariel!

ARIEL

Call me no more,

Lest they torment us. I hear them

Coming now.

THE VOICE OF SYCORAX

Caliban!

ARIEL

Hush!

[Gigantic, the twisted form of SYCORAX looms from within the rock.]

SYCORAX

[Calling toward the sea.]

Come, fish-fowl! Leave thy flapping in the mud

And keep thy father's temple. Call his priests.
 Thy father Toad's a god, hath double teeth
 In his two heads. The Tiger loins of him
 Begot thee in my belly for a cub
 To lick his paws and purr, else he may pinch thee
 Behind an eye-tooth, like yon flitter mouse
 That hangs there wriggling.

THE VOICE OF CALIBAN

So, so Sycorax!—

Coming!

SYCORAX

Aye, so so: crawling still!

[Malformed and hissing, CALIBAN enters on his belly and arms.]

CALIBAN

Syc-Syc-

Sycorax! See!

SYCORAX

What hast thou got thee?

CALIBAN

[Laughs, half rising, and holds up a wriggling creature.]

Got

A little god—a little Caliban.

Ha!—make him out of mud. See: Squeezed it round

And slipped him through my fist-hole. Am a god:

[Rising.]

See Sycorax—her grandchild!

SYCORAX

'Tis an eel-worm.

Fling him to the white bat yonder.

[Her form vanishes in the rock.]

CALIBAN

[Approaching the idol.]

Ariel,

Here's food for thee: a wormling for thy beak.

So, my trapped bird:—How sayst, ha?

ARIEL

[Sings.]

"Where the bee sucks there suck I."

CALIBAN

[Laughing.]

Bee, sayst thou?

Still buzzest of thy wings, and eatest—air!

ARIEL

[Sings.]

"In a cowslip's bell I lie."

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

[Sing within.]

*"Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Courtsied when you have and kiss'd
The wild waves whist.
Foot it feathly here and there"—*

CALIBAN

Ho, blast their noises! Stop thy spirits' squealing.
Their piping itcheth me like hornets' stings.

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

[Sing on, within.]

"And, sweet sprites, the burthen bear"—

CALIBAN

[Screaming.]

Setebos! Squash 'em!

POWERS OF SETEBOS

[Sing below with strident roarings, drowning the song of Ariel's Spirits.]

Setebos! Setebos! Thou art Setebos!

CALIBAN

[Exulting grotesquely.]

Who'll dance by yellow sands?—Who's free now, spirit?

Ho, Caliban can squash their music. Free?
Aren't I a god, bitch-born, the son of Setebos
Can howl all hell up? Worship me, thou wings!
Praise my toad-father in his temple!

ARIEL

The priests
Of Setebos are Lust and Death and War.
Not Ariel—nor Ariel's Spirits ever—
Shall do them honor. One shall come hereafter
Whom we now worship, waiting.

CALIBAN

[Roaring.]

Sycorax!

SYCORAX

[Reappearing.]

Swallow thy croakings, bullfrog. Call the priests,
And fill this spirit's nostrils with the reek
Of Setebos, his blood-rites.

THE SPIRITS OF ARIEL

[Cry out piercingly.]

Ariel!

ARIEL

Peace, my brave hearts! Be dumb—but still be dreaming!

CALIBAN

Powers of Setebos!—Lust, Death, War,—ho, now!
Hither, and do my father worship!

ARIEL

[Stifling a cry.]

Ah!

[Enter LUST, DEATH, and WAR, arrayed as priests of Setebos.]

SYCORAX

[To Caliban.]

Come, toad-boy: watch with me, within.

CALIBAN

[Going within the cave, as Sycorax disappears.]

Free, saith?

Will dance by yellow sands?—Now, Spirit, dance!

[As Caliban goes within, the powers of Setebos come forth.

At the altar beneath Ariel, the three Priests lead them in ceremonial rites of primeval pageantry and dance—the sacrificial worship of Setebos. Above them Ariel suffers, with closed eyes. In their rites, Lust pours his libation, and lights the altar fire, which—when War has made there his living sacrifice—Death extinguishes in darkness.

Through the dark, which gradually changes to a glowing dusk, Ariel speaks aloud.]

ARIEL

O Spirits, I have dreamed, but Death has closed
My sight in darkness. Spirits, I have begotten
Sweet Joy, but Lust hath drowned her in his wine.
Yea, I have wove Love wings, but War hath robbed them

And riven his lovely body all alive
To feed the hungering flames of Setebos.
My Spirits, I your master am unmastered.
Speak to me! Comfort me! Is there no joy,
No love, no dream, that shall survive this dark?
Hath this our isle no king but Caliban?
Are there no yellow sands where we shall dance
To greet the master of a timeless dawn?
Or must there break no morning?—Ah, you are dumb
Still to my doubtings. Yet the dark grows pale,
And, paling, pulses now with rosier shadows;
And now the shadows tremble, and draw back
Their trailing glories: hark! All little birds
Wake in the gloaming: look! What young Aurora
Walks in the dusk below, and like a child
Turns her quick face to listen?—Ah!

[Below, against the light from the sea, has entered the dim Figure he describes.]

THE FIGURE

Who calls?

ARIEL

Spirits, 'tis she! O, we have dreamed her true
At last—Miranda!

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

[Call, in echoing song.]

Miranda!

MIRANDA

[Searching with her eyes.]

Earth and air

Echo my name. Who calls me?

ARIEL

Ariel.

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

[As before.]

Ariel!

MIRANDA

Light and dark spin webs around me.
What art thou, voice—and where?

ARIEL

Here—and your servant.

MIRANDA

[Beholding him.]

O me!—poor Spirit!—What mouth so terrible
Utters a voice so tender?

ARIEL

Setebos,
God of this isle, holds me in 's fangs.

MIRANDA

But why?

ARIEL

I will not serve him.

MIRANDA

[Naïvely, drawing nearer to the huge idol.]

Setebos, be kind.

Release this Spirit.

ARIEL

He hath nor ears, nor eyes,
Nor any sense to know thee by, but only
These tusks and claws and his toad-belly.

MIRANDA

Dost

Thou suffer, so?

ARIEL

Not now.

MIRANDA

And hath he held thee

Long captive?

ARIEL

Since old ocean's slime first spawned
Under the moon, I have awaited thee
And him thou bringest here.

MIRANDA

You mean my father,
Prospero.

ARIEL

[Exultingly.]

Hail him, Spirits!

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

[Sing.]Prospero!

MIRANDA

Yea, many a starry journey we have made
Searching this isle. At last to-day, at dawn,
I saw its yellow sands, and heard thy voice
Calling for pity. Now my father is come
And shall release thee.

ARIEL

Where? Where is he?

MIRANDA

Here:

His cloak is round us now: he holds us now

In his great art, revealing each to each
Though he be all invisible.

[Reëntering, Caliban comes forward, sniffing and peering at Miranda.]

CALIBAN

Hath feet
And hair: hath bright hair shineth like a fish's tail;
Hath mouth, and maketh small, sweet noises.

ARIEL

[Crying out.]

Beast,

Go back!

MIRANDA

[Staring, amazed.]

What's here?

CALIBAN

Ca—Caliban; cometh here
To smell what 'tis.

[He sniffs nearer; then howls strangely.]

Spring in the air: Oho!

MIRANDA

Alas, poor creature! Who hath hurt thee?

CALIBAN

Hurt?

Who hurteth God? Am seed of Setebos:
 Am Caliban: the world is all mine isle:
 Kill what I please, and play with what I please;
 So, yonder, play with him: pull out his wings
 And put 'em back to grow.—Where be thy wings,
 Spring-i'-the-air?

MIRANDA

O Ariel, is this sight
 A true thing, and speaks truly?

ARIEL

What you hear
 And see—'tis my master.

(MIRANDA

'Tis so wonderful
 I know not how to be sad.

CALIBAN

[In puzzled fascination, staring at Miranda.]

The moon hath a face
 And smileth on the lily pools, but hath
 No lily body withal: thy body is
 All lilies and the smell of lily buds,
 And thy round face a pool of moonbeams!

MIRANDA

[With smile and laughter.]

Nay,

Then look not in, lest thou eclipse the moon.

CALIBAN

Syc—Sycorax hath no such laughing: soundeth
Like little leaves i' the rain! Hath no such mouth
Bright-lipp'd with berries ripe to suck i' the sun—
Sycorax.

MIRANDA

Who is Sycorax?

ARIEL

Ah, pain!

CALIBAN

Ho, she that hath calved Caliban to the bull
Setebos, my blood-sire. [Pauses at a glowing thought, then cries with sudden exultance:] So shall us twain
Caliban all this world!

[He crouches, then rolls over at her feet.]

—Laugh, Spring-i'-the-air!

Lift so thy lily-pad foot and rub his ear
Where the fur tickleth, and let thy Caliban
Tongue-lick its palm.

[He lies, dog-like, on his back, and laughs loud.]

CALIBAN

MIRANDA

This wonder grows too wild.

ARIEL

Go, go! O flee away!

CALIBAN

[Leaping up.]

Away?—Aye, so!

[He approaches Miranda, who recoils, half fearful.]

Wist where salt water lappeth warm i' the noon
And shore-fish breed i' the shoals.—Wist where the sea-bull

Flap-flappeth his fin and walloweth there his cow
And snoreth the rainbow from his nostrils.

[He begins to dance grotesquely about her.]

Ho,

Spring-i'-the-air! shalt leap, shalt roll in the sun, Shalt dance with lily-warm limbs, shalt race wi' the gulls!

Shalt laugh, and call—Come, Come!

Come, come, Caliban!

Catcheth who catcheth can!

Mateth mew, mateth man:

Catch, come, Caliban!

ARIEL

O Setebos, let me go free!

MIRANDA

[To Caliban.]

Peace! Dance no more.
Go hence, and leave me.

CALIBAN

[Staring.]

Hence? Aye, both—us twain.

MIRANDA

[With simple command.]

Nay, thou alone.

CALIBAN

[With narrowing eyes, draws nearer.]

Saith what?

MIRANDA

[Unafraid.]

Go from me.

CALIBAN

[Stops, with a hissing growl.]

Syc-

Syc- Sycorax! Sycorax!

SYCORAX

[Reappearing.]

Mole in the mire, wilt squeak
When thou art trod on?—Bite! Bite, Setebos' son!
Let the brave wonder breed of thee.

CALIBAN

Aye, mother.

[With rising passion—to Miranda.]

A child! Shalt bear me such as thou, with head
Of Caliban: no eel-worm, nay—a wonder,
With lily feet, that walk. Ho, Setebos!

SYCORAX

Setebos! Mate them at thine altar.

MIRANDA

[Fleeing from Caliban, pauses in terror of Sycorax.]

Save me!

POWERS OF SETEBOS

[Sing within.]Setebos! Setebos!

CALIBAN

[Rushing toward Miranda.]

Mine!

MIRANDA

Save me, father!

ARIEL

[Calling shrilly.]

Prospero!

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

[Sing within.]

Prospero! Hail!

[A clap of thunder strikes, rolling, in sudden darkness. Lightnings burst from the idol of Setebos. From the flashing gloom, choruses of contending spirits commingle the roar of their deep bass and high-pitched choirs.]

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

Prospero! Prospero!

Out of our earth-pain

Raise and array us

In splendor of order!

Pour on our chaos—

Prospero! Prospero!—

Peace to our earth-pain!

POWERS OF SETEBOS

Setebos! Setebos!

Lord of our earth-bane,

Loose on his wrath way

The beast of thy jungle!

Pour on our pathway—

Setebos! Setebos!

Blood for thine earth-bane!

[Amid the tempestuous song, darkness, and thunder, appears on the left a glowing, winged throne. On

the throne sits PROSPERO—in one hand, a scroll; in the other, a miraculous staff.]

PROSPERO

[Raising his staff.]

Darkness, be light!—Tempest, be calm!—Miranda!

[The scene grows light, and is still.]

MIRANDA

[At the steps of the throne.]

Father!

PROSPERO

Come to me, child.

[As she mounts to him gladly.]

Sit here beside me.

[She sits at his feet, nestling in the folds of his great garment.]

My cloak and staff protect thee.

MIRANDA

[Raising her eyes in dread.]

But the wild thing?

PROSPERO

Must be transformed.—Caliban!

CALIBAN

[Crouching at the centre, howls terribly.]

Setebos—sire!

Sycorax—mother! Hast swallowed them. Lord Thunder,
Strike us no more!

PROSPERO

I strike no more till time

Hath need of thunder. Rise now and be tamed, Howler at Heaven.

CALIBAN

[Rising, bewildered.]

Tamed, saith? What shall it be—

That “tamed?”

PROSPERO

That shalt thou learn of Ariel.

Now—Ariel!

*[He looks toward Ariel, still held in the mouth of Setebos.
Sycorax lies heaped and still by the altar.]*

ARIEL

[Joyously.]

Master!

PROSPERO

Sycorax, lo, 'tis dead.

CALIBAN

[With wailing cry.]

Ah—yo!

PROSPERO

The will of Setebos is matched with mine
To rule our world. Time shall award the prize—
Mine own Miranda—to his power or mine.
His might is awful, but mine art is deep
To foil his power and exalt mine own.
Ariel, thy spirits shall help me.

ARIEL

Master, how?

PROSPERO

Thou, long time artless, now shalt learn mine art
To win my goal—Miranda's freedom. Never Till this immortal Caliban shall rise
To lordly reason, can Miranda hold
Her maiden gladness undismayed. For that I will release thee from those fangs
Of Setebos.

ARIEL

For that, dear master, I have waited
Long ages, dreaming.

PROSPERO

So, wilt give thy promise
To learn of me, and teach this monster here?

ARIEL

O set me free to be thy servant ever.
Master, I promise!

PROSPERO

Fly! Run free!—Unfang him,
Setebos!

[Prospero raises his staff.]

*Slowly the tiger-jaws of the Idol open their fangs.
Ariel, with a joyous cry, slips into the air, and—as he floats fluttering to the earth—his unseen choir of Spirits sing with shrilly gladness:]*

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

Prospero! Prospero! Hail!

ARIEL

[Dancing on the earth.]

Free! Free!

MIRANDA

[Eagerly.]

O, now his fettered Spirits: Free them too!

PROSPERO

Well urged, my own Miranda.—Setebos,
Disgorge these long-embowelled choirs!—Spirits,
Come forth!

[Again Prospero raises his staff.]

Yawning enormous, the toad-mouth of the Idol, filled with green and blue light, widens to a lurid aperture

*out of which come forth—dancing—the star-bright
Spirits of Ariel.*

As they come, Ariel—springing toward Caliban—cries exultingly:]

ARIEL

Now, Caliban, we dance by yellow sands!

[Singing as they rush forth, the Spirits dart with Ariel swiftly about the grovelling Caliban and chase him, dodging and whining, down the steps to the ground-circle, mottled with its shadowy continents of the world, and rimmed with its long, yellow wave-lines.]

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

*“Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands:
Courtsied when you have and kiss’d
The wild waves whist.
Foot it feattly here and there
And, sweet sprites, the burthen bear:
Hark, hark!
Bow-wow!
The watch-dogs bark:
Bow-wow!
Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer
Cry: cock-a-diddle-dow!”*

[Encircling Caliban in their dance, and pelting him with bright handfuls of the yellow sands, they tease and drive him howling into his cave cell, where his dark, monstrous shape silhouettes for a moment on the orange-red glow, then vanishes within.

As he disappears, to their last "Bow-wow!" and "Cock-a-diddle-dow!", they hasten back above to Ariel, who leads them before Prospero.]

ARIEL

The beast is routed, Master. Was 't well done?

PROSPERO

The routed beast—returns. I charge thee, Spirit,
Not to torment, but teach him—for which task
Thou wilt require mine art. So by its power
We will transform this cave of Setebos
To be a temple to Miranda. Now
Let these thy Spirits lead her to her shrine
Yonder, where all her maiden Muses wait
To make her welcome.

[Prospero points to where, on the right, appears Miranda's shrine. From its portals come forth the Nine Muses, bearing lutes and pipes. Prospero, turning to Miranda, rises and gives her into Ariel's care.]

Child, go with them now
And tarry till I summon.

MIRANDA

Sir, I will.

I thank you and these Spirits, and may we all
Be saved from Setebos.

ARIEL

Sweet Mistress, follow!

[To a melodious luting and piping played by the Muses, Ariel and his Spirits escort Miranda to the centre, where the Muses meet and conduct her into the shrine, while Ariel's Spirits—at a gesture from him—dart through the centre of the Cloudy Curtains and disappear.]

PROSPERO

[Calling.]

Now hither, bird, and perch!

ARIEL

[Running to him, on the throne.]

Beside you, Master!

PROSPERO

[Pointing to the ground-circle.]

Seest yonder Yellow Sands? There sleep the shores,
The cloudy capes and continents of time;
There wane and wax eternal tides, that mark
The ebb and flow of empires with their foam.
There shalt thou see the million-colored skein

Whereof I weave mine art. Look well and learn!
 For this my art is of no only land
 Or age, but born of all—itself a world
 Snatched from the womb of History, to survive
 Its mortal mother in imagination.—
 Dost thou attend me?

ARIEL

Word and will, dear Master!

[At the mouth of Caliban's cell are now visible Lust, Death, and War, who in pantomime indicate to Caliban their conspiracy against Prospero and Ariel.]

PROSPERO

'Tis well, for thou must prove my pupil. Look!
 Even now the priests of Setebos conspire
 With Caliban against us. They will compass
 My fall, Miranda's ruin, and thy bondage
 Unless mine art can foil them. Therefore, now
 Thou shalt behold the pageant of mine art
 Pace from antiquity. First, while yon glass
 Lets flow its yellow sands, behold appear
 My rites of ancient Egypt, Greece, and Rome,
 And, while they pass, I will instruct thee how
 To use them.—Pageant, appear!

[A deep gong sounds.]

Lo, Egypt comes!

FIRST INTERLUDE*

Now in succession through the great gates of the ground-circle, in colorful incursions of costume and music, appear three main pageant groups, that perform—with distinctive artistry of dance, pantomime, mass movement, and choral song—three ritual episodes of the dramatic art of antiquity. The nature of each, by a few brief sentences, Prospero expounds to Ariel, and so to the audience. Concluding, each group of the first two departs from the circle.

The first Action—a symbolic ritual of Egypt—enters in seven separate processions, which converge at the centre in worship of the golden god Osiris.

The second group—expressing the noble zenith of Greek dramatic art—chants, with aspiring, athletic dance, the second chorus of the Antigone of Sophocles, celebrating the splendor of man. This Action is performed by the altar.

With the third enters a contrasted decadence of the theatre's art with the Roman Mimes, who enact a farcical

*The more detailed description of this Interlude is given in the Appendix, pages 162 to 183.

Comedy in Masks, in presence of the emperor Caligula and the Roman populace. Concluding, this Roman group does not depart, but retiring into partial shadow on the right, awaits there its later summons.

ACT I

[As the Roman Interlude closes, the light passes from the ground-circle to the middle stage, where Prospero—descending his throne with Ariel—moves toward the centre. While they speak together there, Caliban—coming from his cave—crawls part way up the steps and lies flat, occasionally lifting his head to listen.]

PROSPERO

So, Ariel, I have harvested for thee
These orchards of mine art, and let thee taste
Their varied fruitages, some that have ripened
In climes auspicious, some that are part decayed.
Now from three vineyards—Egypt, Greece, and Rome—
I will distill a varicolored wine
For Caliban to drink. So, steeped in spirit,
Haply he also shall see visions. Hast
Thou learned by heart all that I whispered to thee?

ARIEL

All, Master.

PROSPERO

Tell me part.

ARIEL

You will create

Out of this world of art three scenes of vision.

PROSPERO

And who shall act them—say!

ARIEL

My Spirits shall;

And I will be their Prologue.

PROSPERO

For what purpose?

ARIEL

To tutor this beast.

PROSPERO

And why?

ARIEL

That he may grow

To reverence Miranda, and forswear
Setebos.

PROSPERO

So! and to dispel the Powers
Of Setebos, I have transformed his cave
To be her temple and my theatre.—Look!

[Prospero raises his staff toward the darkness that conceals the background. As he does so, increasing light reveals the rude, irregular contours of the cave of Setebos transformed to the architectural lines of a splendid proscenium, in the oblong of which the Cloudy Curtains shut off the inner stage. The idol of Setebos has vanished.]

While this transformation is taking place, the Spirit Choirs of Ariel appear above the proscenium, singing.]

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

*In the same abode and cell
Where the Toad was wont to dwell,
And the Tiger stretched his claw,
We have built a shrine of Law:
We have chosen the lair of hate
To love, imagine and create.*

*Out of blood and dross,
Out of Setebos,
We are risen to show
The art of Prospero:
Here within his head and heart
Our souls are servants of his art.*

[Their appearances vanish above.]

ARIEL

Most noble Master! Show me now behind
Those cloudy curtains: How have you transformed
The cave within?

PROSPERO

Come; I will show thee how.

[Prospero and Ariel pass through the curtains at the centre and disappear within.]

Meanwhile Caliban, peering above the top step, stares in dumb awe at the changed scene. There he is hailed from below by the priest of Setebos, Lust, who comes forth from his cell and calls:]

LUST

Caliban! Remember Setebos!

CALIBAN

[Starting, backs down the steps in scared pantomime.]

Aye, Setebos! But I hear their watch-dogs bark:
Bow-wow! I feel their tongue-bites yet—their torments.

LUST

Caliban! Restore thy father's temple.

CALIBAN

Yea, but my father had no feet to dance.
Curse on their yellow sands! They sting my eyes
Still wi' their blindings. Blast 'em!

[He springs part way up the steps again.]

LUST

Caliban!

Restore the priests of Setebos!

CALIBAN

His priests!

Nay, what if the cock sang—their chanticleer
His Diddle-diddle-dow! Burneth my spine
Still with that crowing.

[Reënter Prospero through the curtains.]

LUST

Hush! he comes again.

I await thy call. Cry on Caligula
And I will come.

[Lust goes in the cell.]

PROSPERO

[Calling within the curtains.]

Now, Ariel, where art thou?

Ariel!

ARIEL

[Stepping forth from behind the curtains, dressed in the garb of Prologue, bows low.]

Here, great Master! I am now
Prologus, at your service.

PROSPERO

Nay, not mine

But his. [Calling.]

Come, Caliban: behold thy tutor.
Behind these curtains he will show thee now
More than thy nature dreams on. If thou obey him
And learn mine art, thou shalt go free like him.
If not, thou shalt be spitted on a tooth
More sharp than Setebos. What sayest?

CALIBAN

[Cringing.]

Lord,
Art Cock o' the world, and Caliban thy worm;
Yea, only beggeth thee crow no more, nor set
Thy dancing dogs to bark at him.

CALIBAN

PROSPERO

Tush, fool:

Wilt thou obey?

CALIBAN

Obeyeth both of you.

PROSPERO

That's well. Sit here and watch. Now, Ariel,
Thy prologue: then reveal what lies behind.

[Prospero mounts his throne, on the steps of which Caliban squats below him, watching and listening with growing curiosity. At the centre, before the Cloudy Curtains, Ariel speaks.]

ARIEL

From Egypt, by our Master's art,
Behold now, when these curtains part,
A scene of fleeting pageantry:
Behold where pale Mark Antony
Hath fled his sore defeated ships
In quest of Cleopatra's lips,
And turned the tides of war amiss
To pawn a kingdom for a kiss.—
So, by my Spirits' acting, see
Of what strange stuff these humans be!

[Ariel retires within through the curtains, which then—to the melodic dirge of flutes within—draw apart, disclosing the inner stage, which depicts a scene of vivid Egyptian coloring.]

FIRST INNER SCENE

Against a background of deep blue sky, the barge* of Cleopatra lies moored at an ancient wharf:

*"The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold;
Purple the sails, and so perfumed that
The winds were love-sick with them. The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. . . For her own person,
It beggar'd all description: she did lie
In her pavilion—cloth-of-gold of tissue—
O'er-picturing that Venus where we see
The fancy out-work nature. On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With diverse-color'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. . . .
Her gentlewomen, like the Nereides,
So many mermaids, tended her i' the eyes,
And made their bends adornings. At the helm
A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackle
Swell with the touches of those flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs."—[Antony and Cleopatra: II, 2. Shakespeare.]

The charm and splendor of this description applies here only to the beauty of the barge and those it bears: otherwise Cleopatra and her attendants are, in their appearance, distraught and fearful, and the barge shows signs of recent perilous escape from the scene of Antony's sea-battle with Octavius Cæsar.

Being here conceived as a plastic vision in the mind of Prospero, this Inner Scene—an excerpt from Act III, Scene XI, of Shakespeare's play—has, by dramatic license appropriate to this masque, been laid in a scene suggested by the above description of the barge.

From the left, along the wharf, enters Mark Antony, attended by Soldiers and Populace in Roman and Egyptian garb.]

ANTONY

Hark! the land bids me tread no more upon 't;
It is ashamed to bear me! Friends, come hither.
I am so hated in the world, that I
Have lost my way forever. I have a ship
Laden with gold; take that, divide it; fly,
And make your peace with Cæsar.

ALL

Fly! Not we.

ANTONY

I have fled myself; and have instructed cowards
To run and show their shoulders. Friends, be gone;
I have myself resolv'd upon a course
Which has no need of you; be gone. . .
Nay, do so; for, indeed, I have lost command. . .

[His followers depart, and Antony throws himself down on a buttress of the wharf.

Meantime from the barge, Cleopatra—who has looked on and listened—is led down to the landing by Charmian and her Attendants, behind whom Eros [a friend of Antony] follows.

They approach Antony, who—absorbed in his grief—does not see them.]

EROS

Nay, gentle madam, to him, comfort him. . .

CHARMIAN

Do! Why, what else?

CLEOPATRA

Let me sit down. O Juno!

[As Cleopatra sinks down near him, Antony—now beholding her—starts up with a cry of surprise and passionate pain.]

ANTONY

No, no, no; no, no!

EROS

[Pointing to Cleopatra's piteous aspect.]

See you here, sir?

ANTONY

[Hiding his face.]

O fie, fie, fie!

CHARMIAN

[Bending over her.]

Madam!

EROS

[Appealing to Antony.]

Sir, sir,—

ANTONY

Yes, my lord, yes; he at Philippi kept
His sword e'en like a dancer, while I struck
The lean and wrinkled Cassius; and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended . . . yet now—No matter.

[He sinks down again.]

CLEOPATRA

[Rising, to her Attendants.]

Ah, stand by . . . sustain me! O!

EROS

Most noble sir, arise; the queen approaches.
Her head's declin'd, and death will seize her, but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

ANTONY

[Drawing still away, despairfully.]

I have offended reputation,
A most unnoble swerving.

EROS

Sir, the queen!

[Cleopatra and Antony face each other—gazing into each other's eyes.]

ANTONY

[Suddenly crying out.]

O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt? See,
How I convey my shame out of thine eyes
By looking back what I have left behind
'Stroy'd in dishonor.

CLEOPATRA

O my lord, my lord,
Forgive my fearful sails! I little thought
You would have follow'd.

ANTONY

Egypt, thou knew'st too well
My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings,
And thou shouldst tow me after. O'er my spirit
Thy full supremacy thou knew'st, and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me.

CLEOPATRA

O my pardon!

ANTONY

Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties, dodge
And palter in the shifts of lowness; who
With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleased,

Making and marring fortunes. You did know
How much you were my conqueror; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

CLEOPATRA

[Touching his arm, clings to him.]

Pardon, pardon!

ANTONY

[Overcome at her touch.]

Fall not a tear, I say; one of them rates
All that is won and lost. Give me a kiss.
Even this repays me. . . Wine!
Bring wine, within there: wine! For fortune knows
We scorn her most when most she offers blows.

[He embraces Cleopatra.]

From the right slaves enter, bearing chalices and wine-beakers. With them come flutists and harpers, making festal music.

Snatching from them a golden cup, Antony raises it aloft with an impassioned gesture, returning the triumphant smile of the Egyptian queen.

CLOSING, THE CLOUDY CURTAINS SHUT OFF
THE SCENE.

[Meantime Caliban, who has risen absorbed and drawn slowly nearer in child-like fascination, stands for an instant, bewildered. Then, with a cry, he leaps forward in the dim-lit space and gropes along the curtains with arms wide.]

CALIBAN

Ho, light! All's smother: 'tis gone! Yo—yo, all gone—
Cloud-swallowed, all! Ah, woman, snake-bright queen, Thou wonder-thing, come back! Ah, where—where—where?

PROSPERO

So, so! Canst thou, then, taste my vision, slave?
[He descends the throne toward Caliban.]

CALIBAN

[Staring about him.]

O dazzle-blue, gold-shine, hot lotus smell!
Blood-root in bloom, and scarlet water-weed!—
O silver sight and tinkle-tickling sound!—
Spurteth my body with joy—burst in my brain
Enormous moons of wonder!—Float, still float,
You purpling sails! Blaze, thou flame-woman!
Speak
Sparkles of kissing fire!

PROSPERO

[Approaching him.]

Nay, art thou touched
Beyond thy tiger cravings?

CALIBAN

Ho, Lord Master,
Lord Chanticleer, unswallow from thy gorge
The world thou hast devoured!

PROSPERO

[Pointing toward Ariel, who comes forth again at Prologus through the curtains.]

Ask of thy tutor;
He hath revealed that world to thy brute ken.—
Ariel, this lump of earth hath dreams within 't,
That now begin to sprout. Send it more sun
And watering.

ARIEL

Sir, your art is rain and sun:
I am but air, to carry its wet or warmth
Whereso you list.

PROSPERO

So let it fall on him
Till he shall wax to a more worthy plant
For Miranda's temple-garden.—Here is my Staff:

This wields my power. Here keep it in thy charge
Till I return. So, use it as a rod
To instruct this bungling cub of Setebos.

ARIEL

[As Prospero goes.]

I will, sir.—Go you far?

PROSPERO

No farther than
The frontiers of mine art. Farewell a while!

[Prospero passes within through the curtains. Half confiding, half suspicious, Caliban comes near to Ariel and questions him.]

CALIBAN

Art, saith! What's that—his art?

ARIEL

'Tis that which burns
Now in thy blood: the same which conjured hither
Bright Egypt and the kiss of Antony.

CALIBAN

The woman and the kiss! Nay, saidest now
'Tis rain and sun!

ARIEL

'Tis so.

CALIBAN

Where falleth his rain?

Where shineth his sun?

ARIEL

Yonder on the Yellow Sands.

CALIBAN

Nay, show me this art! Is 't hidden in thy hand?
Here, let me hold the staff.

[Caliban reaches for the staff; Ariel raises it warningly.]

ARIEL

Stay! Touch it not
Lest it shall scorch thy fingers and set fire
To the building world. The staff of Prospero
Is for his servants, not for slaves, to wield.

CALIBAN

[Drawing back from it, in fear.]

Scorcheth my fingers, ah?—So wield it, thou!
Show me once more the snake-bright queen.

ARIEL

Nay, Egypt

No more! But come with me to Prosper's throne
Where I play master now. Here thou shalt sit
And watch the battlements of eternal Troy
Where Troilus woos inconstant Cressida.

CALIBAN

Showest me once more—woman?

ARIEL

Even so;

For many kinds of woman make mankind.

[Rising, Ariel points toward the inner stage and speaks chantingly.]

Now, from out Time's storied sphere,
Homer's Troy I summon here,
On a dawn when Hector seeks
Battle with the besieging Greeks:
There, while heroes throng the gates,
Cressida her lover 'waits,
Casting from a height apart
Tangling hooks for Troilus' heart.—
Behold her now, by Prosper's art!

[Ariel raises his staff.]

SECOND INNER SCENE*

The Cloudy Curtains draw back, revealing the battlements of Troy. Above, on a rampart, in the first rays of morning, CRESSIDA appears, with a maiden Attendant.

*During this scene, Caliban—watching intently—slides from the steps of the throne and crawls slowly forward on his stomach to the centre, where he lies prone, with head lifted—his body pointed toward the Inner stage—kicking at times his lower legs [from the knees] in the air.

Below, murmuring crowds are looking toward the outer gates. Among them pass the aged Trojan Queen, and the Greek Helen, in her younger beauty.

CRESSIDA

[Peering below.]

Who were those went by?

ATTENDANT

Queen Hecuba and Helen.

CRESSIDA

And whither go they?

ATTENDANT

Up to the eastern tower
To see the battle—Hector,
Before the sun uprose, was harnessed light
And to the field goes he.

[Enter behind them Pandarus.]

CRESSIDA

Hector's a gallant man.—

[Turning to greet him.]

Good morrow, Uncle Pandarus.

PANDARUS

[Smiling.]

Good morrow, Cousin Cressid.

[Trumpets are sounded, off left.]

Hark! They are coming from the field. Shall we stand up here and see them as they pass toward Ilium?

CRESSIDA

At your pleasure.

[They move to a better vantage. At a gesture from Cressida the Attendant departs.]

PANDARUS

Here, here's an excellent place. I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

CRESSIDA

[With a reproving laugh.]

Speak not so loud.

[Below, from the left, Trojan warriors, in battle gear, begin to pass by, through the admiring populace who cheer them occasionally.]

Among them

ÆNEAS PASSES

PANDARUS

That's Æneas: is not that a brave man? He's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you. But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.

ANTENOR PASSES

CRESSIDA

Who's that?

PANDARUS

That's Antenor: he's one o' the soundest judgments in Troy. But when comes Troilus? I'll show you Troilus anon. If he sees me, you shall see him nod at me.

CRESSIDA

[Archly.]

Will he give you the nod?

PANDARUS

You shall see.

CRESSIDA

If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR PASSES

PANDARUS

That's Hector: that, that, look you, that; there's a fellow!

Go thy way, Hector! There's a brave man, niece.

CRESSIDA

O, a brave man!

PANDARUS

Swords! anything, he cares not; an the devil comes to him, it's all one. Yonder comes Paris—Paris!

PARIS PASSES

Who said he came hurt home to-day? He's not hurt. Why, this will do Helen's heart good now, ha! Would I could see Troilus now! You shall see Troilus anon.

HELENUS PASSES

CRESSIDA

Who's that?

PANDARUS

[Searching with his eyes, grows impatiently expectant.]

That's Helenus.—I marvel where Troilus is.—That's Helenus—I think he went not forth to-day.—That's Helenus.

CRESSIDA

Can Helenus fight, uncle?

PANDARUS

Helenus? no. Yes, he'll fight indifferent well.—I marvel where Troilus is. Hark! do you hear the people cry "Troilus?"

TROILUS PASSES

[As he approaches, the populace cheer him.

His eyes, however, search about till they rest on the battlement, where Cressida, returning his look, starts back, trembling.

Noting both their actions, Pandarus continues flauntingly to point out the young hero.]

'Tis Troilus! There's a man, niece. Hem! Brave Troilus!

CRESSIDA

Peace! For shame, peace!

PANDARUS

Mark him: note him. O brave Troilus! Look well upon him, niece; look you how his sword is bloodied, and his helm more hacked than Hector's. O admirable youth! Go thy way, Troilus, go thy way! Had I a sister were a grace, or a daughter a goddess, he should take his choice. O admirable man! Paris? Paris is dirt to him.

[While he is speaking, Cressida has taken from her hair a flower, knotted its stem to an arrow, and dropped the arrow beneath the rampart, where Troilus lifts it with a smile and happy gesture, bearing it away with him, right. As Pandarus now turns to her, Cressida looks away left and points to others below.]

CRESSIDA

Here comes more.

MORE FORCES PASS

PANDARUS

Asses, fools, dolts! Chaff and bran! Porridge after meat! I could live and die i' the eyes of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look! the eagles are gone; crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather be such a man as Troilus than Agamemnon and all Greece.

[Enter, above, Troilus' Boy, who speaks to Pandarus.]

THE BOY

Sir, my lord Troilus would instantly speak with you.

PANDARUS

Where?

THE BOY

At your own house; there he unarms him.

PANDARUS

Good boy, tell him I come. [Exit Boy.] Fare ye well, good niece.

[He goes off, above.]

CRESSIDA

Adieu, uncle!

[Below, the last of the soldiers and populace have passed off, right, where Cressida gazes after them, speaking aloud to herself:]

O more in Troilus thousandfold I see
Than in the glass of Pandar's praise may be;
Yet hold I off. Women are angels, wooing.
Things won are done; joy's soul lies in the doing.

[Below, from the right, Troilus hastens back, alone.
The arrow with the flower he has thrust through the links in his chain armor on his left side. Pointing to it, he calls up toward the battlement.]

TROILUS

Cressida!

CRESSIDA

[With a glad cry.]

Troilus!

[Unwinding her long wine-red scarf, she ties it to the battlement, whence it flutters down to Troilus. Seizing it, he mounts by its aid toward the rampart, where the face of Cressida peers luringly above him.]

TROILUS

[Calling upward as he mounts.]

Cressida!

[Just as he is about to reach Cressida,

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE.

[At the centre Caliban now leaps up in loud, excited laughter. Clapping his hands in the air, he strides toward Ariel on the throne.]

CALIBAN

Aha! Troy, Troy! Lips of Troyland and Egypt!
Lovers in links of gold! Ho, wine of woman
Bubbling in vats of war!—drinketh you all
Caliban, Caliban, son of Setebos.—Ariel,

Learnest me Art? Lo, now: I am his Artist!
 Tell him, Lord Prospero, Caliban createth Glories more 'stounding still. Art? Ho, 'tis God's play!

But me? Am God i' the mire: can make me Troy
 And purple Egypt out of the mud i' my palm;
 Giveth me only that—his little play stick

[Pointing to the staff in Ariel's hand.]

To stir in the mud withal.

ARIEL

Not yet!—This staff
 Is wrought to stir the spirits of the air,
 Not dabble i' the slime.

CALIBAN

Why so? From bog-slime bloometh
 The lotus, and the sea-lark feedeth her young
 Along the salt flats.—

[With childish wheedling.]

Prithee—the staff?

ARIEL

[Descending the throne.]

'T'would burn thee.

Touch not till thou art free. Yet patience, monster,

For thou hast learned to answer well, and growest
Rarely in thought and speech.

CALIBAN

[Tickled to laughter.]

Yea, clever monster
Soon groweth monstrous clever. More art, fine Ariel!
Let Caliban speak thy Prologue.

ARIEL

Hush!—Miranda!

*[From her shrine Miranda comes forth, with the Muses.
Seeing the two, she pauses astonished.]*

MIRANDA

Nay!—Is this Ariel?

ARIEL

'Tis I—Prologus.
Will you hear me, Mistress?

MIRANDA

[As Caliban approaches.]

Thou!—thou, Caliban!

ARIEL

My pupil.

CALIBAN

[With confiding assurance.]

Liketh well thy father's art,
Spring-i'-the-air.

MIRANDA

God speed thy learning, monster!
I am more fain to help thee in that task
Than all else in the world.

CALIBAN

[Astonished and eager.]

Wouldst help me—thou?

MIRANDA

How happy, if I could!

CALIBAN

Yea, canst thou!—Hark:

[Glancing from his garb to Ariel's.]

Let me wear glory, too! What booteth me
To be his Artist, if I wear no cloth
To show my glory? He there talketh no Prologue Without his toga. Tog me, too, in brave Colors!

MIRANDA

Well thought on.

[To one of the Muses.]

Quick, Euterpe: Fetch
Bright vesture forth.

ARIEL

For Caliban?

MIRANDA

For whom

So fit? The need of beauty lies
Most near to them who lack it.

[Euterpe returns, bringing bright garments, which she and the other Maidens help now to put upon Caliban.]

So, dear Muses:

Lay on!

CALIBAN

[Delightedly tries to survey himself.]

Ha, Sycorax, an thou wert here now
To look on this thy son!

[He parades, with swelling pleasure, before the Muses.]

Gaze well, good Spirits!
Now. Ariel, thy pupil soon shall teach thee

What thing this Art is: yea, teach Prospero
A lesson in 's own lore.

MIRANDA

[To Ariel, who is about to protest.]

Pray, let him tarry
This time with us. He is too full of dreams
To act us harm. Speak on thy Prologue.

CALIBAN

[Still parading.]

Prologue!

Aye, good: my Prologue shall come after.

ARIEL

Mistress,
Keep here, this staff for your protection.
[Accepting the staff from Ariel, Miranda takes seat on the shrine, where the Muses range themselves about her.]

MIRANDA

So!

Be near us, Caliban.

CALIBAN

[Moving to the shrine steps, speaks to Ariel.]

What showest now?

ARIEL

[At centre, before the curtains.]

Now, in Time's emblazoned tome
Egypt, Greece, turn page for Rome.

CALIBAN

[Mutters aloud.]

Rome, ha! I'll show you Rome!

ARIEL

Rocked by mighty Cæsar's fall
Glooms the world in battle pall,
Where by midnight, worn and spent,
Weary Brutus, in his tent,
Watches 'mid the Roman host.
There the pallid Cæsar's ghost
Rises from his candle-flame
Accusing.—Who shall bear that blame?
Can Brutus wake a world from shame?

[Ariel disappears through the curtains. Miranda raises the staff.]

THIRD INNER SCENE

The Cloudy Curtains part, disclosing the tent of Brutus, by moonlight.

Brutus—his outer armor laid aside—sits on a couch:
near him Lucius, a boy, nods drowsily over a stringed instrument. After a brief pause, Brutus—gazing at him—speaks wistfully:

BRUTUS

Bear with me, good boy :
Canst thou hold up thy heavy eyes awhile
And touch thy instrument a strain or two?

LUCIUS

Aye, my lord, an't please you.

BRUTUS

It does, my boy:

I should not urge thy duty past thy might;
I know young bloods look for a time of rest.

LUCIUS

I have slept, my lord, already.

BRUTUS

It was well done; and thou shalt sleep again;
I will not hold thee long. If I do live
I will be good to thee.

LUCIUS

[Tuning his instrument, sings dreamily:]

Fear no more the frown o' the great;
Thou art past the tyrant's stroke.
Care no more to clothe and eat;
To thee the seed is as the oak.
The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this and come to dust.

[Lucius falls asleep.]

BRUTUS

This is a sleepy tune. O murderous slumber,
Lay'st thou thy leaden mace upon my boy
That plays thee music? Gentle knave, good-night;
I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee.—
Let me see, let me see; is not the leaf turned down
Where I left reading? Here it is, I think.

[The Ghost of Cæsar appears.]

How ill this taper burns!—Ha! Who comes here?
I think it is the weakness of mine eyes
That shapes this monstrous apparition.
It comes upon me. Art thou anything?
Art thou some god, some angel, or some devil,
That makest my blood cold and my hair to stare?
Speak to me what thou art.

[In the darkness, dark ghostly shapes, hardly visible, appear to urge forward the dead Cæsar, who alone is luminous.]

THE GHOST

Thy evil spirit, Brutus.

BRUTUS

Why comest thou?

THE GHOST

To tell thee thou shalt see me at Philippi.

BRUTUS

Well; then I shall see thee again?

THE GHOST

Aye, at Philippi.

BRUTUS

Why, I will see thee at Philippi, then.

[The Ghost and the dim Shapes disappear. Brutus rises.]

Now I have taken heart, thou vanishest:

Ill spirit, I would hold more talk with thee.—

[Calling aloud.]

Boy, Lucius! Romans, Romans! Awake—awake!

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE

[Instantly, in the semi-darkness without, Caliban—with a great cry—springs among the Muses, snatches from Miranda the staff, and rushes with it to the centre of the middle stage, shouting aloud:]

CALIBAN

Awake, Romans, awake!

[Low thunders growl, and sharp flashes glimmer about him.]

MIRANDA

[Cries out, appalled.]

The staff! His staff!
Touch not its power, lest thou lay waste the world!

CALIBAN

[Grasping the staff, staggers and sways wildly with it as though being shocked by an invisible force.]

Rome! Now do I hold the roof-beam o' the world.
Now am I lord of lightnings: Lo, mine art
Shaketh the throne of Prospero.

[He strides upon the throne, raising the staff.]

Awake,
Imperial Rome! Return, ye snake-bright women
Of Troy and Egypt! Stain these yellow sands
Wine-red with spillings of your wreathèd bowls,
And let the orgied priests of revel reign.—
Caligula, be crowned by Setebos!
Caligula! Caligula! Caligula!

[While he cries aloud, the Powers of Setebos come forth from the cell beneath, clad as Roman men, women, and slaves and, joined by the Roman Interlude Pageant on the ground-circle, raise the Emperor on a palanquin upon their shoulders, and bear him up the steps to the middle stage, shouting "Caligula!"
Here a scene of mingled riot and orgy follows:

Women dancers with golden bowls, slaves shackled and driven with whips, rabble groups scrambling for bread loaves flung them by heralds, armed soldiery, and gorgeous patrician lords: these swarm in a sordid saturnalia, from the midst of which the masked form of Caligula rises dominant in splendor. At his gesture, slaves tear the Muses from their shrine, and give them over to the revellers.

High above all, clutching the staff, his huge limbs rioting grotesque from his silken garments, Caliban dances on the throne of Prospero.

Below, bass voices of invisible choirs chant through the din :

“ Setebos ! Setebos ! Thou art Setebos ! ”

Seized from the throne with the Muses, Miranda—at the centre—is borne in faint dread to the reaching arms of Caligula, who is about to place upon her his crown, when a sudden pealing of silvery trumpets strikes silence over all. In awe the revellers gaze upward, and turn toward the background, listening.

Above them there, from the darkness, appears a colossal CROSS, burning with white fire.

Caligula drops his crown.

Shadow falls on the colorful pageantry, and all sink slowly to their knees, as the Spirits of Ariel appear again above—their luminous wings outspread like seraphim.

*At either end one blows a slim tapering trumpet.
High and clear, then, their choirs chant in Gregorian unison :*

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

Vexilla Regis pródeunt;
Fulget Crucis mystérium,
Quo carne carnis Cónditor
Suspénsus est patíbulo.

Quo vulneratis însuper
Mucrónè diro lanceæ,
Ut nos laváret criminè,
Manavit unda et ságuine.

O Crux, ave, spes, unica:
Hoc Passiónis témpore,
Auge piis justítiam
Reisque dona veniam.

Te summa Deus Trínitas,
Collaudet omnis spiritus:
Quos per Crucis mystérium
Salvas, rege per sæcula.

During this chant, the dim revellers beneath bow their bodies more low.

And now, to faint organ music, the Cloudy Curtains, parting, reveal the INNER STAGE hung like an early Christian shrine in a catacomb—with primitive tapestries of dusky blue and gold. Against these in the glow of candles, an image of haloed Saint Agnes holds a white lamb, which silent shepherds are adoring. This group remains motionless as a tableau.

Then silently from either side two priests come forth with swinging censers. Passing forward and down the steps to the ground-circle, they are followed in the dim light by the Roman revellers, who rise and pass off through the Interlude gates.

Last of all rises Caligula, who pauses hesitant, looking back where Miranda still kneels, now grouped about by her Muses.

As he stoops to lift his crown from the earth, two Figures in the INNER SCENE—a Shepherd Boy, and a Shepherd wrapt in a hide mantle—stir from the still picture and come forward in a circle of light, while THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE behind them, and above the white cross vanishes.

Speaking from the place of light to the Emperor's form in shadow, the Shepherd calls to him:]

THE SHEPHERD

Caligula!

THE EMPEROR

Who calls?

THE SHEPHERD

Reveal thyself—

What thing thou art.

[Stepping slowly into the light, the EMPEROR bows himself before the SHEPHERD, holding up his crown which the Shepherd takes and says with a gesture:]

Lay off thy mask.

[Rising, the Emperor puts off his mask, revealing himself as the PRIEST OF SETEBOS.]

Hail, Lust!

LUST

[To the Shepherd.]

Hail, Prospero!

PROSPERO

[Putting off his sheepskin cloak, which the boy takes from him.]

Return to Setebos.

[To the Shepherd Boy.]

Ariel, lead him below.

ARIEL

So, Master!

[Ariel leads Lust away to the cell beneath.]

MIRANDA

[Rising, goes to Prospero's arms.]

Father!

[From the outer dimness, Caliban—who, since the appearance of the burning Cross, has lain flat on the throne steps—now grovels forward [trailing his silken garment by one sleeve] and flings the staff of Prospero into the light space.]

CALIBAN

No more! Will never touch it more!

PROSPERO

[Staring at the staff.]

A thousand years

To build, and build for beauty, yet in one flare

Of riot lust, a lubber idiot

Confounds time and my toil.—Ah, daughter, daughter!

How shall mine art reclaim this lapsing ape

From his own bondage?

MIRANDA

Sir, my heart is shaken;

Yet the sweet sight of Agnes and her lamb

Hath shown new comfort.

[Stooping, she lifts the staff and holds it toward him.]

Therefore, even as a Shepherd,
Take up thy staff in patience, and urge still onward
This poor sloughed sheep.

PROSPERO

Yea, patience! Sun, moon, stars,
And all that waxes hath its waning-hour;
But patience is the night behind the stars,
Steadfast through all eclipse.

[With his staff, he touches Caliban where he lies cringed.]

Stir, thou thick clot
Of clay and god-spittle! Let thine atoms thaw
To mud, where Prosper may imprint once more
His blurrèd seal.

CALIBAN

[Hoarsely, half rising.]

Mud: yea, methought to be
His Artist, and make dream-things of mine own
Like Ariel his spirits, yet now—am mud.

MIRANDA

[Pitifully.]

Nay, star-dust!

ARIEL

[Returning.]

Master, from those far frontiers
You visited, have you not brought us back
More pageants of your art?

PROSPERO

Yes, Ariel:

Back from the dim bourns of the Middle Age
Of Germany, France, Spain, and Italy.
And now, for this slave's tutelage, I'll show you
Their quaint moralities and mad-cap mirth.
Come hither, and watch: Lo, olden Germany!
Pageant of the north, appear.

SECOND INTERLUDE*

Once more, through the community gates of the ground-circle, appear, in contrasted ritual, successive Folk-Groups, that perform now episodic phases of the dramatic art of Europe in the Middle Ages. Concluding, each group departs.

First comes the Germanic, in part grimly austere, in part naïvely grotesque. On a portable, three-tiered stage this group enacts both audience and players of a popular morality play: a pantomime scene depicting—in heaven, earth, and hell—the tragic, romantic HISTORY OF DOCTOR FAUSTUS.

This Action is followed by the contrasted splendor of a mediæval French scene. Here, in presence of the Kings of France and England, on THE FIELD OF THE CLOTH OF GOLD, is performed a colorful tournament on horseback.

Last follows a fusion of the Spanish and Italian groups in the Third Action: a light-hearted dramatic Scherzo, full of laughter, knavery, and romantic love, performed—in the midst of a festa—by the pied actors of the COMMEDIA DELL' ARTE.

* For fuller description of this Interlude, See Appendix, pages 184-194.

During this last Action, Prospero and Ariel [above] have withdrawn through the Cloudy Curtains, leaving Caliban alone, staring spellbound at the many-hued festival below him.

ACT II

[Now, when the Italian Interlude is concluded, the light—passing to the middle stage—illumines at centre the lone figure of Caliban, where he squats above his cell. Gazing out over the ground-circle, he calls aloud his yearning thoughts:]

CALIBAN

O Sands—Yellow Sands! Falleth on you his rain, Shineth his sun! Yea, there his breeding dew Quickens your blind rock-seeds, till wondrous live things

Burst 'em with flame-bright petals; and where his light falls

You blossom with stars and flowers: But me—me saith,

Am mud! Calleth me a bubble of black ooze
Can breed but only mine own belly-kind—
Bog-fish and moles.—Lieth!

[Rising with a great gesture.]

He lieth! 'Tis lies!

Sands!—You wild, yellow sands! I, too, I, too,
Am born to dance by your eternal waves

And build brave temples there. I, too, shall bring you
Shoutings of life-song, like those Spirits.—Lo,
I come to you—I come now!

[Running down the steps, he rushes out upon the ground-circle, where he stoops on bent knees and kisses the shining earth.

Behind him, at the entrance of the cell, Death appears, holding a great gray cloak.

He comes forward, speaking in a thin monotone.]

DEATH

Caliban!

CALIBAN

[Raising his head.]

What calleth me there?

DEATH

Death: priest of Setebos.

CALIBAN

His temple is fallen: will build no more like his.

DEATH

Thou shalt restore his temple, Caliban.

CALIBAN

[Rising.]

Nay, will not!

DEATH

None can say me Nay. I am
The will to not be which denies all wills.

[Through the Cloudy Curtains—slowly—Prospero enters, in troubled meditation.]

CALIBAN

And I am Caliban: [Pointing toward Prospero.] will be his servant.

DEATH

Caliban, thou shalt fail. Thyself art failure,
Setebos' son.

CALIBAN

Myself am done with Setebos:
Wear now Miranda's cloth.

DEATH

Thou shalt wear mine.
Behold!

CALIBAN

[Looking at the gray cloak.]

What's that?

DEATH

My cloak, where thou shalt hide
To snare Miranda unto bondage. Hark!

[Far, cold, and thin a dirgeful choir sounds from the cell behind the figure of Death.]

THE DIRGE

*Gray—gray—gray: Joy be unholy and hidden;
Wan be the rainbow of wonder, frozen the tide!
Blind—blind—blind: Passion be pale and forbidden;
Dumb be the lips of the soul to Beauty denied!*

PROSPERO

[Speaks to Ariel, who comes running from behind the Cloudy Curtains.]

Blithe bird of mine, my heart is boding ill.
Hast thou heard?

ARIEL

Nay, Master, what?

PROSPERO

His dirges.

ARIEL

Whose?

PROSPERO

'Setebos'. Ha, 'tis not his lust I dread,
Nay, nor his tiger tooth, nor belly on fire:

'Tis when his fever cools: when the gray ash
Covers the life-flame, and the boiling senses
Skim with thin ice, and the rank bloom wears hoar-frost:

Not savage souls, 'tis dead souls that defeat us.
Not red, but gray—gray.

[While Prospero and Ariel have spoken together above, Caliban, below, has been drawn half hypnotized by Death toward the cell.]

DEATH

[To Caliban.]

Follow me.

CALIBAN

I follow!

DEATH

*[At the cell's mouth, lifts the gray cloak to put upon
Caliban.]*

Wear now my color.

CALIBAN

[As Death touches him, springs back.]

No, no; thy hand-touch freezeth.

[Fearfully he leaps up the steps, crying aloud:]

Prospero! I will serve thee.

DEATH

[Disappearing within the cell.]

Thou shalt fail.

CALIBAN

[Bowing before Prospero.]

Master, raise up thy servant.

PROSPERO

Raise thyself.

CALIBAN

[Slowly rising.]

So—while thou lookest on me, I can rise.

PROSPERO

Nay, look once more on what I now create
For thee to rise by. 'Tis mine art, not me,
Reigns as thy master. Master it, and go free.

[The Three move toward the throne, where they soon group themselves on the steps.]

CALIBAN

What wilt thou show me now?

PROSPERO

A mind distraught—
Grasping at realms invisible—like thine,
Poor groping dreamer. Ariel, from the scroll

Of mine old Gothic meditations, bid
Thy spirits blazon now a glimpse of Hamlet.

[He hands to Ariel his scroll.]

ARIEL

Your will, great Master, we revere it.—
Lo where, to meet his father's spirit,
Pale Hamlet watches now, before
The parapets of Elsinore!

[Ariel raises the scroll; then, unrolling it, bends his looks upon it, while the Cloudy Curtains part, revealing the

FIFTH INNER SCENE.

On a platform at Elsinore, by blazing starlight, three Figures are seen pacing the cold.

HAMLET

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.

HORATIO

It is a nipping and an eager air.

HAMLET

What hour now?

HORATIO

I think it lacks of twelve.

MARCELLUS

No, it is struck.

HORATIO

Indeed?

I heard it not: then it draws near the season
Wherein the spirit held its wont to walk.

[A flourish of trumpets, and ordnance shot off within.]

What does this mean, my lord?

HAMLET

The King doth wake to-night and takes his rouse,
Keeps wassail, and the swaggering up-start reels;
And, as he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettle-drum and trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his pledge. . . .

HORATIO

[Pointing.]

My lord, it comes!

[Enter Ghost.]

HAMLET

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!—
Be thou a spirit of health or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heaven or blasts from hell,
Thou comest in such a questionable shape
That I will speak to thee: I'll call thee Hamlet,

King, father, royal Dane: O answer me! . . .
What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again in complete steel
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous, and we fools of nature
So horridly to shake our disposition
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?
Say, why is this? Wherefore? What should we do?
[The Ghost beckons Hamlet.]

HORATIO

It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.

MARCELLUS

Look with what courteous action
It waves you to a more removed ground:
But do not go with it.

HORATIO

No; by no means.

HAMLET

It will not speak; then I will follow it.

HORATIO

Do not, my lord.

HAMLET

Why, what should be the fear?

I do not set my life at a pin's fee;
And for my soul, what can it do to that,
Being a thing immortal as itself?—
It waves me forth again : I'll follow it.

MARCELLUS

You shall not go, my lord.

HAMLET

Hold off your hands.

HORATIO

Be ruled; you shall not go.

HAMLET

My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.
Still am I call'd. Unhand me, gentlemen.
By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets me!
I say, away!—Go on; I'll follow thee!

[As Hamlet, impetuous, makes after the departing ghost,

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE

CALIBAN

[Springing up.]

No, no! Follow not! Let him not follow! 'Tis
A spirit lureth to Setebos and Death.
He knoweth him not, what 'tis;—but, master, I know.
Me, me too hath he beckoned with blind eyes
And offered his gray cloth.

PROSPERO

Thee? Death hath beckoned
And yet thou didst not follow?

CALIBAN

Hither I fled
To serve thee, but he said that I should fail;
Yet—yet, and thou wilt help, I will not fail!

PROSPERO

And what wouldst have of me?

CALIBAN

[Pointing to Ariel.]

Thy wonder scroll:
Nay, not thy staff again! Will never more Botch with thy lightnings. Nay, but this littler thing
Lend me, and let me bear it against Death

To free my father's spirit from his gray pall.

Lettest Ariel: let now thy Caliban

Conspire to serve thee.

[He reaches for the scroll.]

PROSPERO

Why, thou wheedlest well,

And I must hope in thy self-weening. Yet

Beware lest thou thyself shalt wear the drab

Thou takest from him: Gray hath arsenic

More keen than scarlet or the corroding blood

That sere'd the flesh of Hercules.

CALIBAN

[Eagerly.]

Wilt lend me

The scroll?

PROSPERO

[With a gesture to Ariel.]

Here!

[Ariel hands the scroll, which Prospero then gives to Caliban.]

Use this token of mine art

Less blindfold than the last.

[Caliban bounds away with the scroll.]

CALIBAN

ARIEL

[Half protesting.]

Will trust him, Master?

PROSPERO

Yea, though he fail me yet again, for only
Trust can create its object.

CALIBAN

[Joyfully kissing the scroll and raising it.]

Now, now, Setebos,

Thy son shall wean thy Powers from Death, thy priest!

[Descending the steps, Caliban hastens to the mouth of the cell, where—as he is about to enter—Death reappears and hails him.]

DEATH

Welcome, Caliban!

[Death beckons within. Pausing momentarily, Caliban seems about to draw back, but recovering his purpose cries out hoarsely.]

CALIBAN

Go on; I'll follow thee.

[He follows within and disappears.]

Caliban and Death have hardly vanished, when Miranda comes from her shrine, followed by the Muses, who are accompanied by a troop of Fauns. The classic hides of these are partly concealed by gay mediæval garments [Florentine and French], and some bear in their hands great vellum books and parchments, which they stack in a pile near the shrine.]

MIRANDA

[Calling joyously.]

Muses, sweet friends to mirth! Come forth again
And fetch your little Fauns, that drowsed so long
In mildew'd vaults of antique vellum, through all
The winters of dark ages. Come, sad Clio, Unpucker your frown! You, pale Melpomene,
Blush to a lovelier time. Yond yellow sands,
That ran blood-red with orgies of old Rome,
Shine golden now with young renascence. The ages
Renew their summer. Joy hath its June once more,
For once more Prosper reigns.

PROSPERO

[As Miranda comes to him.]

'Tis thy returning
Restores my summer time. I see thou hast
Been rummaging old lockers.

MIRANDA

Aye, sir, and found

These sharp-eared Fauns, hiding like wintered field-mice

In attic parchments. So I set 'em free
To play, while Care the Cat's away.—Come, now,
Sicilian boys, caper your shag-hair shins,
And thou, Terpsychore, lead on their dance
To please my father.

[At her command, Terpsychore and the Fauns—to instruments played by the Muses—perform a joyous dance before Prospero. As they conclude, he greets them with a smile.]

PROSPERO

Thanks, you hearts upleaping!
After long ominous hours, thanks for your festa!
And you, dear child incorrigible for joy,
Come now, I will requite you—not in gold,
But golden fantasy, wrought all one glow
Of shadowless shining.

MIRANDA

Ah, another vision?

PROSPERO

Aye, 'tis a vision, that myself beheld
Shine on the soil of France. I'll show you Peace :
The kings of earth at peace, after red battle;
Two kings of men, each clasping brother's hand
Warm with the golden passion of strong peace.

MIRANDA

What kings were they, and where?

PROSPERO

England and France:

'They met in the vale of Andren, 'twixt Guynes and Arde;

I was then present, saw them salute on horseback;
Beheld them, when they lighted, how they clung
In their embracement, as they grew together.'—*
But tell us, Ariel, what I told thee remember,
How Peace was crowned on the Field of the Cloth of Gold.

MIRANDA

How brave a name! Would I had been there!

ARIEL

[Bowing, as Prologue.]

'You lost

The view of earthly glory: men might say
Till this time pomp was single, but now married
To one above itself. Each following day
Became the next day's master, till the last
Made former wonders its. To-day, the French,
All clinquant, all in gold, like heathen gods,

*From Shakespeare's "King Henry the Eighth," Act I, Scene 1.

Shone down the English; and to-morrow, they Made Britain India: every man that stood Show'd like a mine. Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubins, all gilt: the madams too,
Not used to toil, did almost sweat to bear
The pride upon them, that their very labor
Was to them as a painting: now this masque
Was cried incomparable, and the ensuing night
Made it a fool and beggar. The two Kings,
Equal in lustre, were now best, now worst,
As presence did present them.*—Lo, now, see How first they met, and clasped their hands in peace!

[Lifting Prospero's staff, Ariel makes a gesture toward the Cloudy Curtains, which part, discovering the

SIXTH INNER SCENE

Here, to an opening fanfare of golden trumpets, takes place a PANTOMIME, all of gold, depicting to the eye, as in a glowing fantasy, the meeting of the Kings and their Retinues: the alighting of the Kings from horseback, their embracement and their clasping of hands.

During this enactment of the pantomime, the choirs of Ariel's Spirits sing, unseen:]

*From Shakespeare's "King Henry the Eighth," Act I, Scene 1.

SPIRITS OF ARIEL

*Glory and serenity,
 Splendor of desire,
 Blend where golden lilies bloom
 Mid St. George's fire:
 Lilies of France!—behold
 How they glow on the Field of the Cloth of Gold,
 And the battle-captains curb their bands
 Where the kings of earth clasp hands.*

*Power and principality
 Raise to Peace their choir
 Where Lord Christ his lilies cling
 Round the Dragon's ire:
 Lilies of Christ!—behold
 How they flame from the Field of the Cloth of Gold,
 Where the captains bow to their Lord's commands
 And the kings of men clasp hands.*

[At the climax of the meeting of the Kings,

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE

PROSPERO

[Smiling, to Miranda.]

This glowing taketh thee.

MIRANDA

O, my good father!

Methinks my soul is a flake o' the sun, for where Things golden shine, I spangle, too; yea, burn
To be Aurora, and trail cloth of gold
Around the world.

PROSPERO

Unless my will miscarry,
Thou shalt be such a morning messenger
And wake the world with beauty. Now my plans
Wait on a vast result, for Caliban
Himself hath gone to deal with Setebos
His gray priest, Death.

MIRANDA

What, Caliban! O glad
Hope for us all! Your art begins to triumph,
And Ariel's Spirits to conquer.

PROSPERO

That still waits:
Meanwhile mine art drinks from this renaissance
Deep draughts against a dark to-morrow.—Hither,
You Fauns! Come, bear my gold-emblazoned scrolls
And silver-claspèd books before me!

[Lifting the scrolls and volumes from their pile by the shrine, the Fauns come forward with them to Prospero, who turns affectionately to Miranda.]

I

Will leave you now, and pore awhile on these
For further conjurings.

MIRANDA

[Detaining him.]

Yet conjure once
Again before you go!

PROSPERO

What wouldst thou, dear?

MIRANDA

Hardly I know: but something high, serene,
And passionately fair: some vision'd glimpse
Of fadeless youth, and lovers rich through love.

PROSPERO

Why, Ariel hath his orders still.—[To Ariel.] List, pupil:

To glad thy mistress' heart, when I am gone,
Pour the warm moon-wine of Italian night
Into a dream-cup, where entrancèd lovers
Seal with charm'd lips their vows. Therein dissolve
What visions rise, till they shall melt in one
Gloaming of love and music.—So, Miranda, Rich dreams! Faun-boys, bear on my books before me!

[Accompanied by the bright-clothed Fauns, bearing the great books and scrolls in quaint procession, Prospero departs through the throne-entrance.

Meantime, the Muses and Miranda gather at the shrine, where Ariel approaches Miranda.]

ARIEL

Mistress—

MIRANDA

Hark, Muses! Ariel, speak on!

ARIEL

Ear and eye, now, list and lo:
 Mirth of mad Mercutio,
 Juliet's sigh for Romeo;
 Dim Lorenzo's murmur'd "Ah!"
 For moon-dreaming Jessica;
 Dance of flower-soul'd Perdita
 Wafted to her Florizel
 Like a wave o' the sea: List well;
 Lo, their night renews its spell!

[At Ariel's last word and gesture, the Cloudy Curtains part, disclosing the

SEVENTH INNER SCENE

In the glow and gloom of Italian night, as high clouds intermittently obscure the moon, a palace garden lies in deep shadow. Emerging only partly into view, where soft light-floodings fall on moss-stained statue, marble bench, and balcony, there is revealed at first [on the left] nothing but a glimpse of garden wall, before which flash in the dimness two pled figures [Benvolio and Mercutio]. Calling shrilly, their young voices rain showers of fluting laughter.

BENVOLIO

Romeo! My cousin Romeo! . . .
He ran this way, and leap'd this orchard wall:
Call, good Mercutio.

MERCUTIO

Nay, I'll conjure, too:

Romeo! humors! madman! passion! lover!—
I conjure thee by thy true love's bright eyes,
By her high forehead and her scarlet lip,
By her fine foot, straight leg, and quivering thigh
And the demesnes that there adjacent lie,
That in thy likeness thou appear to us!—
He heareth not, he stirreth not, he moveth not.

BENVOLIO

Come, he hath hid himself among these trees,
To be consorted with the humorous night:
Blind is his love and best befits the dark.

MERCUTIO

If love be blind, love cannot hit the mark . . .
Romeo, good-night: I'll to my truckle-bed;

This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep:
Come, shall we go?

[They disappear, swallowed up in black shadow.
And now the shadow, shifting, leaves bare in mellow moonshine a glimpse of the garden and the balcony, where Juliet, bending forward, calls mysteriously into the dark below:]

JULIET

Hist! Romeo! hist! O for a falconer's voice,
To lure this tassel-gentle back again!
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cave where Echo lies,
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine
With repetition of my Romeo's name.

ROMEO

[Emerging, below, from the shadow.]

It is my soul that calls upon my name:
How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,
Like softest music to attending ears!

JULIET

Romeo!

ROMEO

My dear?

JULIET

At what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee?

ROMEO

At the hour of nine.

JULIET

I will not fail: 'tis twenty years till then.

I have forgot why I did call thee back.

ROMEO

Let me stand here till thou remember it.

JULIET

I shall forget, to have thee still stand there,

Remembering how I love thy company.

ROMEO

And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,

Forgetting any other home but this.

JULIET

'Tis almost morning; I would have thee gone:

And yet no further than a wanton's bird,

Who lets it hop a little from her hand. . . .

Good-night, good-night! Parting is such sweet sorrow

That I shall say good-night till it be morrow!

[Once more deep shadow engulfs the scene; and now, out of the dark, harmonious music sounds in strains of passionate wistfulness. So, as the music sounds, on the right, beams of the moon reveal a flowery bank, whereby Lorenzo and Jessica are discovered.]

LORENZO

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank !
Here will we sit and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears : Soft stillness and the night
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Sit, Jessica. Look how the floor of heaven
Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold :
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins,
Such harmony is in immortal souls ;
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

[Swift shadow sweeps over them in darkness. Waning from its visionary theme to a hint of the "muddy vesture of decay," the music flows onward then into a dance melody; moonlight touches the garden again [on the left] with its liquid glow, wherein—whirled into light from a group of shadowy dancers outside—Florizel and Perdita are disclosed.]

FLORIZEL

[As Perdita withdraws shyly her hand from his, speaks to her ardently.]

What you do
Still betters what is done. When you speak, sweet,

I'd have you do it ever. . . When you do dance,
 I wish you
 A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
 Nothing but that; move still, still so,
 And own no other function: each your doing
 So singular in each particular,
 Crowns what you are doing in the present deed,
 That all your acts are queens. . .

PERDITA

O Doricles,
 Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
 And the true blood which peepeth fairly through 't,
 Do plainly give you an unstained shepherd,
 With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
 You woo'd me the false way.

FLORIZEL

I think you have
 As little skill to fear as I have purpose
 To put you to 't. But come; our dance, I pray:
 Your hand, my Perdita!

PERDITA

[Giving her hand confidingly.]

My Florizel!

[Together they dance away into the dark and the luring music, as

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE

[Still, after the curtains' closing, the music continues, but now more faint, changing the idyllic strains of the dance rhythm to a minor sadness, which gradually takes form as a drear, monotonous processional. Through the faint music, Miranda speaks to Ariel.]

MIRANDA

Too brief! too brief, sweet bird! O Ariel, be Time's nightingale, and charm these lovers back
To yearn immortal youth. Methinks already
Their absence leaves us age'd: Dost thou not feel
A waning of high powers? Doth not a pallor
Creep on the glowing world?

ARIEL

Yea, so I have felt
After the equinox—November coming on.

MIRANDA

[Starting, as she gazes at one of the Muses.]
Euterpe dear! What lock of gray is this
In thy bright hair?—Quick, Ariel: fetch my father,
For sudden my heart aches, and I wish him near.

ARIEL

Straight I will bring him, and my Spirits, too.
Be merry, mistress: they shall soon restore us.
[Ariel hastens off, left. As he does so, the Muses, with downcast looks, file off right into the shrine.]

MIRANDA

Nay, darling Muses! do not leave me, too.
 What, must you all go hence? Still I must tarry
 To greet my father. Friends, good-bye!

[They depart.]

Ah me!

What voices make their dirge within my heart?

[While she has spoken, the mouth of Caliban's cell, emitting a ghastly glow, fills with dim Shapes, which pour outward, and swarm slowly upward over the steps, covering the stage with a moving, huddled grayness, out of which two cloaked Figures rise distinct in the dusk. As they come forth and hover nearer to Miranda, a cold dirge issues with them from below.]

THE DIRGE

[As before.]

Gray—gray—gray: Joy be unholy and hidden;
 Wan be the rainbow of wonder, frozen the tide!
 Blind—blind—blind: Passion be pale and forbidden;
 Dumb be the lips of the soul to Beauty denied!

[Slowly the gray hosts surround Miranda, who stares at them, only half believing their presence, till the dusk, growing lighter, reveals their long Puritan cloaks and peaked hats, and the two muffled

Ones in Gray towering before her. Then faintly she speaks to them:]

MIRANDA

What are you? Why are you come? Ah, you—'tis you:

Priest of Setebos!—Caliban!

[She sways and falls.]

CALIBAN

Ha, she swooneth.—

O Death, unfasten thy spell!

DEATH

Nay, thou hast failed.

[Lifting the scroll of Prospero, which he has taken from Caliban, Death makes a gesture to his followers.]

Bear her to Setebos!

[Then, laying his hand upon Caliban, he turns with him backward, as a group of the gray-cloaked Shapes raise the limp form of Miranda to a cloth-draped bier, and thus bear her downward toward the cell's mouth. In dim procession, as they go, they raise again their dirge:]

THE DIRGE

Gray—gray—gray: Love, be sin-born of Misgiving!

Life, be a garment of dullness, drab from the loom!

Bleak—bleak—bleak: Death, Death is lord of the living:

Not in the clay but the heart of man lies the tomb.

[Disappearing in the cell below, their chant dies away.

Above them, from the left, Ariel returns, alone.

Searching in the dusk, half fearfully, he calls:]

ARIEL

Miranda—mistress: He hath vanished. Nowhere

Can I find trace of him. Yea, and my Spirits

They, too—they, too, are gone, lost in the grayness:

All have deserted us! Miranda—mistress!

Where art thou? Gone, thyself?—and I alone!

O gray, that hast engulfed a world of beauty,

Where shall I find them ever more—my master,

My star-bright mistress? Hear me, Yellow Sands!

If you have beheld them, answer now my prayer!

[Outstretching his arms toward the Sands.]

Prospero! Prospero!—Master!

[From far across the Sands bursts a mellow radiance, and the rich voice of Prospero calling in answer:]

PROSPERO

Ariel! Ariel!

Ho, bird!

[Springing into light upon the farthest wave-lines of the Yellow Sands, Prospero comes returning, surrounded by the Spirits of Ariel, clad all in green and bearing in their midst a garlanded May-pole. Marching joyously across the circle toward Ariel, all in radiant glow, they come shouting a choral song:]

THE SPIRITS OF ARIEL

*"Sumer is icumen in,
Lhude sing cuccu !
Groweth sed, and bloweth med,
And springth the wude nu.—Sing cuccu !*

*"Awe bleteth after lomb
Lhouth after calve cu !
Bulluc sterteth, bucke verteth,
Murie sing cuccu !*

*"Cuccu, cuccu, well singes thu, cuccu:
Ne swike thu naver nu;
Sing cuccu, nu, sing cuccu,
Sing cuccu, sing cuccu, nu !"*

[Leaping up the steps, they plant the May-pole at the centre, where Ariel greets them.]

ARIEL

Dear Master! O blithe hearts: Have welcome home!

PROSPERO

Welcome our May-pole back!—Where is thy mistress?

ARIEL

[Startled.]

Alas! You know not?

PROSPERO

[Reassuringly.]

Nay, I know. But cheerly,
My birdlings! Now that ye are flocked once more
Round this enchanted tree, I'll conjure you
Out of mine art such joyous rites, that they Shall draw your Mistress even from the tomb
To join our revels. Come now, gather round
And watch my antic rites of Merry England!

THIRD INTERLUDE*

Now through the Interlude gates, and from all sides, a jocund festival pours into the illumined space of the ground-circle: the folk festival of Elizabethan England.

Simultaneously, in different parts, as in a merry rural fair, various popular arts and pastimes begin, and continue together: Morris dancers and pipers, balladists and play-actors, folk dancers, fiddlers, clowns, and Punch-and-Judy performers romp, rant, parade, and jingle amongst flower-girls and gay-garbed jesters spangling by the bright venders' booths.

Central, at a point of vantage, above a gaping crowd of lumpkins and children, Noah's wife harangues the heavens from the old play.

So they pursue their merriment, till the low rumble and lowering of a thunder-cloud disperses them with its passing shadow.

* See Appendix, pages 196-204, for more detailed description.

ACT III

[At the conclusion now of the English Interlude, out of the shadow a roseate glow suffuses the cell of Caliban, from which the green-clad Spirits of Ariel come running forth, bringing in their midst Miranda. Leading her in daisy chains, they mount with her the steps toward Prospero, singing in glad chorus:]

THE SPIRITS OF ARIEL

*“Spring, the sweet Spring, is the year’s pleasant king;
Then blooms each thing, then maids dance in a ring,
Cold doth not sting, the pretty birds do sing,
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo !*

*“The palm and may make country houses gay,
Lambs frisk and play, the shepherds pipe all day,
And we hear aye birds tune this merry lay:
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo !*

*“The fields breathe sweet, the daisies kiss our feet,
Young lovers meet, old wives a-sunning sit,
In every street these tunes our ears do greet:
Cuckoo, jug-jug, pu-we, to-witta-woo !
Spring ! the sweet Spring !”*

PROSPERO

[Greeting her.]

Welcome, most dear!

MIRANDA

Once more you bring me home,
And the gray world wears green!

THE VOICE OF CALIBAN

[Calling, beneath.]

Ho, Spring-i'-the-air!

MIRANDA

Hark!

[From his cell, bare-headed, with gray cloak unbound and flapping behind, Caliban bursts forth and hastens toward them.]

CALIBAN

Spring-i'-the-air! Ah, leave me not alone!
Take me forth with thee, too! Not Death can hold
me
When thou goest forth from him.

MIRANDA

It was thyself
That led'st me unto him.

CALIBAN

With thee—with thee
Would I lie even with Death. But when thou leav-est,
Thy life-song pricketh his sod, and maketh my sap
To leap, and lick the sun again.

[Kneeling before her.]

O, whither
Thou goest, let Caliban go, and wear thy cloth
Whatso its colors be!

PROSPERO

[Darkly.]

Keep from her, slave!
Touch not her hem. Her Muses garbed thee once
Gay in her colors. Thou soiled'st them with shame.
Next time thou worst drab, and lured'st thy Mistress
Deathward in gray. Now—now thou darest crave
Once more to wear her cloth?

CALIBAN

Yea, do I! See:
This cloak—so I forswear it!
[He puts off the gray cloak, tears it, and tramples upon it; then turns to Miranda.]

Give me now
Thy green to wear!

CALIBAN

PROSPERO

Insolence infinite!

Ariel, my staff!

MIRANDA

Stay!—What to do?

PROSPERO

[About to raise the staff.]

To teach

This unwhipt hound—to howl.

CALIBAN

[Starting back.]

Great Master!

MIRANDA

Grace,

Dear Father! Patience needs no quick compulsion.
Thine art is wondrous patient, and this poor
Slow climber needs thine art.

PROSPERO

Why, once again

Thou art my wiser self.

[To Caliban.]

Go, lick her hand,

And feed from it.

CALIBAN

[Laying his cheek on Miranda's hand weeps, with great sobs.]

Spring—Spring-i'-the-air, thy dew
Dabbleth my face. O wonder, what art thou
That fillest so mine eyes with rain-shine?

MIRANDA

April,
Not I, can conjure spring i' the air, and April
Plies rarest art in England.—Ariel,
Fetch us, from out my father's dreamery,
Nature's spring-charm and echo of English song!

[To the Spirits of Ariel.]

Our greenwood cloth! Come, busk him, merry men
all:

Aye, both of us!

CALIBAN

[Rapturously.]

This time I will not fail thee.

MIRANDA

[To Prospero, indicating Caliban.]

Have faith in this fellow-creature, and let these spirits
Clothe him anew.

CALIBAN

PROSPERO

As you like it, dear, be it so!

[The Spirits clothe Caliban and Miranda in green, while from within the Cloudy Curtains an unseen chorus sings:]

THE CHORUS

“Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And tune his merry note
Unto the sweet bird’s throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.”

ARIEL

Spirits within, ho!

[The Spirits run through the curtains, at centre, and disappear within.]

Prosper’s hood
Broods now a dream of Arden wood,
Where young Orlando, daring fight
For succor of old Adam’s plight,
Defies the greenwood company—
But meets there with no enemy.

CALIBAN

[By the throne with Miranda and Prospero, murmurs aloud:]

No enemy!

[As Ariel raises his staff, the Cloudy Curtains part, disclosing

THE EIGHTH INNER SCENE

A place of dappled shine and shadow in the forest. No boughs or trees are visible, but only a luminous glade of color, where falling sunlight filters a swaying glow and gloom from high, wind-stirred branches above. On the edges of the scene, the semi-obscure half conceals forms of the forest company [Jacques, the Duke, etc.] who, seated about their noon-time meal, sing their chorus:

THE CHORUS

Who doth ambition shun
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats
And pleased with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.
[Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.]

ORLANDO

[Fiercely.]

Forbear, and eat no more!

JACQUES

Why, I have eat none yet.

ORLANDO

Nor shalt not, till necessity be served.

THE DUKE

What would you have? Your gentleness shall force
More than your force move us to gentleness.

ORLANDO

I almost die for food; and let me have it.

THE DUKE

Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

ORLANDO

Speak you so gently? Pardon me, I pray you:
I thought that all things had been savage here;
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of stern commandment. But whate'er you are
That in this desert inaccessible
Under the shade of melancholy boughs
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time;
If ever you have looked on better days,

If'ever been where bells have knoll'd to church,
 If ever sat at any good man's feast,
 If ever from your eyelids wiped a tear
 And known what 'tis to pity and be pitied,
 Let gentleness my strong enforcement be:
 In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

THE DUKE

True is it that we have seen better days,
 And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church,
 And sat at good men's feasts, and wiped our eyes
 Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd:
 And therefore sit you down in gentleness
 And take upon command what help we have
 That to your wanting may be minister'd.

ORLANDO

Then but forbear your food a little while,
 Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn
 And give it food. There is an old poor man,
 Who after me hath many a weary step
 Limp'd in pure love: till he be first suffic'd
 I will not touch a bit.

THE DUKE

Go find him out,
 And we will nothing waste till you return.

ORLANDO

I thank ye; and be blest for your good comfort!

[Exit Orlando.]

THE DUKE

Thou seest we are not all alone unhappy:
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woeful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play in.

JACQUES

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players!

[Re-enter Orlando with Adam, whom he helps to support.]

THE DUKE

Welcome! Set down your venerable burden
And let him feed.

ORLANDO

I thank you most for him.

ADAM

So had you need:
I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

THE DUKE

Welcome: fall to! Give us some music; sing!

[Once more, as the chorus resumes the song "Under the Greenwood Tree,"

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE

[The music dies away within.

With a strange, dawning reverence, Caliban turns to Miranda and speaks:]

CALIBAN

"I scarce can speak to thank you for myself."—
Like him there you have furnish'd me food of pity
And a new world with no enemy!

MIRANDA

You have none,
Save the blind storms of your own nature.

CALIBAN

Those
Tempests are still now.

PROSPERO

[Approaching.]

So mine art hath power
Once more to calm? Good: now the time is ripe
Methinks to rest awhile, for I am happily

Weary, and will take rest from thought.—Miranda,
Wilt come within? Unhood me for brief slumber,
And smooth my couch?

MIRANDA

[Rising.]

Right gladly.

PROSPERO

[To Ariel.]

And thou, too,
One moment: I've more for this tutelage.

[Prospero passes off, right, by the throne exit, accompanied by Ariel. Miranda, about to follow, pauses at Caliban's entreating voice.]

CALIBAN

Stay! What your pity hath made me cries to you—
Leave me not! Let me be yours!

MIRANDA

[Wonderingly.]

How mean you—mine?

CALIBAN

Your Caliban, your creature, your bond slave
To fetch and bear for you.

MIRANDA

I want no bonds
'Twixt me and any friend. Nay, we are friends
And free to serve each other.

CALIBAN

Yet I yearn
For more: I know not what.

MIRANDA

What more could be
More happy?

CALIBAN

Here I crawled upon my belly
Brute-stuttering for you, where now I stand
And pray—with Prosper's tongue. His art hath bred
Within my blood a kinship with your kindness
That cries: "Miranda, thou and I are one!"—
I know not how—I know not how.

MIRANDA

You love me.
'Tis simple, then: I love you, Caliban.

CALIBAN

[In a splendor of amazement.]
Lovest me—thou? thou!—Wilt be mine?

MIRANDA

Nay, truly

You know not how. Love knows not mine and thine,
 But only ours; and all the world is ours
 To serve Love in. I am not thine, good friend.

[She goes within.]

CALIBAN

Stay yet!—She loveth me! Yet Love, she saith,
 Love knows not mine and thine.

A VOICE FROM BENEATH

[Calls deeply.]

She shall be thine,

Caliban!

CALIBAN

[Starting.]

Mine! Who saith that word?

THE VOICE

She shall

Be thine!

CALIBAN

How mine?—Say!

THE VOICE

Thou shalt fight for her.

CALIBAN

[Pointing toward the Cloudy Curtains.]

Shall fight? Nay, there—the youth put by his sword,

For the other said: “Your gentleness shall force
More than your force move us to gentleness.”

THE VOICE

Yet thou shalt fight!

CALIBAN

[Springing forward above his cell.]

What art thou?

[From the mouth of the cell a flame-colored Figure strides forth and replies:]

THE FIGURE

War: thy father's Priest.—Caliban, remember Setebos!

CALIBAN

Ha, Setebos! Com'st thou once more with priest-craft

To lure me back to him?—Begone!

WAR

Yet not Without me shalt thou win Miranda.

CALIBAN

[Fiercely.]

Go!

WAR

[Returning within the cell, disappears as his voice dies away.]

Remember War! Miranda shall be thine!

CALIBAN

[Hoarsely.]

Miranda—mine!

ARIEL

[Comes running from the throne entrance.]

Ho, pupil, now be merry!

Great Prosper sleeps, and from his slumber sends thee

A dream of fairy laughter.

CALIBAN

[Darkly, amazed.]

Laughter!

ARIEL

Aye,

An English make-believe of antic elves
And merry wives, to douse the lustful fire

Of old John Falstaff, lured to Windsor Forest.—
Our Master deems thou hast learned art enough
To laugh at apings of it.

CALIBAN

[Still amazed, but curious.]

Laugh?

ARIEL

Aye, list!

[Caliban stands on one side, with arms folded and listens.]

To Windsor's magic oak now turn:
There—his fatty bulk in guise
Of the hornèd hunter Herne—
Big Sir John in ambush lies
Where the counterfeited fays
Troop along the forest ways:
How his lust will cease to burn
For the Merry Wives—now gaze
Yonder by the oak, and learn!

[Ariel raises his staff. Parting, the Cloudy Curtains disclose

THE NINTH INNER SCENE

The gigantic trunk of an oak rises in moonlight, surrounded by the glimmering purple of the obscure forest.

Trooping from the left, enter the disguised Fairies, following their leader Sir Hugh Evans.]

EVANS

Trib, trib, fairies; come; and remember your parts: be pold, I pray you; follow me into the pit; and when I give the watch 'ords, do as I pid you: Come, come; trib, trib.

[They conceal themselves.

A distant chiming sounds as Falstaff enters, disguised as Herne, wearing a stag's head with great horns.]

FALSTAFF

The Windsor bell hath struck twelve; the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded gods assist me! Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns. O powerful love! That, in some respects, makes a beast a man, in some other a man a beast.

CALIBAN

[Listening intently near the edge of the scene.]

A man a beast!

FALSTAFF

Think on 't, Jove: Where gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, i' the forest. Send me a cool rut-time, Jove! Who comes here? My doe?

[Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.]

MRS. FORD

Sir John! Art thou there, my deer? My male deer?

FALSTAFF

My doe with the black scut! Let the sky rain potatoes, let it thunder to the tune of green sleeves; I will shelter me here.

MRS. FORD

Mistress Page is come with me, sweetheart.

FALSTAFF

Divide me like a bribe buck, each a haunch: Am I a woodman, ha? Speak I like Herne the hunter? As I am a true spirit, welcome!

[Noise within.]

MRS. PAGE

Alas, what noise?

MRS. FORD

Heaven forgive our sins!

FALSTAFF

What should this be?

MRS. PAGE AND MRS. FORD

Away! Away!

[They run off.]

FALSTAFF

I think the devil will not have me damned, lest the oil that's in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

[Enter Sir Hugh Evans, disguised as before; Pistol, as Hobgoblin; Mistress Quickly, Anne Page, and others as Fairies, with tapers.]

MRS. QUICKLY

Fairies, black, gray, green, and white,
You moonshine revellers, and shades of night,
You orphan heirs of fixed destiny,
Attend your office and your quality.
Crier Hobgoblin, make the fairy oyes.]

PISTOL

Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys!

FALSTAFF

They are fairies; he that speaks to them shall die:
I'll wink and couch: no man their works must eye.

[He lies upon his face.]

EVANS

Where's Bede? Go you, and where you find a maid
That, ere she sleeps, has thrice her prayers said,
Raise up the organs of her fantasy;

Sleep she as sound as careless infancy!
But those as sleep and think not on their sins
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins!

CALIBAN

[Growing excitedly absorbed.]

Ha, pinch them, saith!

MRS. QUICKLY

Away; disperse: but till 'tis one o'clock,
Our dance of custom round about the oak
Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

EVANS

Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set;
And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be
To guide our measure round about the tree.
But, stay; I smell a man of middle-earth.

FALSTAFF

Heaven defend me from that Welsh fairy, lest he transform me to a piece of cheese!

PISTOL

Vile worm, thou wast o'erlook'd even in thy birth.

MRS. QUICKLY

With trial-fire touch me his finger-end:
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend
And turn him to no pain; but if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

PISTOL

A trial, come.

EVANS

Come, will this wood take fire?
[They burn him with their tapers.]

FALSTAFF

Oh! Oh! Oh!

CALIBAN

[Crying out.]

Ah, ah! They plague him, too!

MRS. QUICKLY

Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire!
About him, Fairies; sing a scornful rhyme;
And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

ALL

[As they dance about him, pinch, burn him, and sing:]

Fie on sinful fantasy!

Fie on lust and luxury!

Lust is but a bloody fire
 Kindled with unchaste desire,
 Fed in heart, whose flames aspire
 As thoughts do blow them, higher and higher.
 Pinch him, Fairies, mutually;
 Pinch him for his villany;
 Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about,
 Till candles and starlight and moonshine be out!

FALSTAFF

[Rising and pulling off his buck's head, cries out:]
 Oh! Oh! Oh!

[As he is about to flee, tormented by the dancing figures,

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE

CALIBAN

[Bursting into bitter laughter.]

Ah—ha, ha!

“Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire!”

Mocketh me, mocketh me, ah!—A man with horns
 And heart of monster!

[Striding fiercely toward Ariel.]

He mocketh me, thy lord!

ARIEL

[Laughing silverly.]

Why, 'tis but fairy sport for laughter.

CALIBAN

[With choking passion.]

Laughter!

Ah-ha! Me, too—me, too, thy spirits plagued
And pinched, to piping jigs.

[Seizing Ariel.]

I tell thee, smiling
Spirit, thy laughter scorcheth me with nettles,
[Pointing toward the curtains.]

And that hot bulk of lust hath made my loins
To rage with boiling blood.

ARIEL

[Struggling.]

Unclutch thy hand!

CALIBAN

Not till I bleed that oil of laughter from thee
Which lappeth me in flame.

THE VOICE OF WAR

[Calls deeply from below.]

Hail, Caliban!

CALIBAN

[Pausing, releases Ariel, and listens.]

Callest me, War?

THE VOICE

Miranda shall be thine!

CALIBAN

Mine!—Yea, now I am mocked to know myself
What rutting stag I am! And her, the doe
I mate, my horns shall battle for, and be Mine own—mine, mine! Miranda!

MIRANDA

[Coming from within, right, raises her hand in gentle warning.]

Hush thy tone;

My father slumbers yet.

[Showing Prospero's hood, which she carries.]

He hath put by
This hood, wherein he sends thee here another Visioning.

CALIBAN

[Stares at her, breathing hard.]

So: what now?

ARIEL

[To Miranda.]

He rages, Mistress.
Beware! He babbleth of War.

MIRANDA

Why, then he conjures

The dream my father sends: another picture,
Painted in gules on England's ancient shield:
King Harry, by the high walls of Harfleur.

[To Caliban.]

So you may learn, good friend, how noblest natures
Are moved to tiger passions—by a painting
Called Honor, dearer than their brothers' lives.

CALIBAN

Why will he show me this?

MIRANDA

Perchance that you,
Born of a tiger's loins, seeing that picture,
May recognize an image of yourself
And so recoil to reason and to love.

CALIBAN

So, mocketh me once more?

MIRANDA

Nay, never that.
But let us look thereon, and learn together.

CALIBAN

[Starts toward her, but curbs himself, trembling.]
Together!

MIRANDA

[To Ariel.]

Hold his magic hood and conjure.

ARIEL

[Taking the hood of Prospero.]

Image of Strife, may never more

Your like draw near!

Pageant of long-forgotten War,

Appear!

Harry of England, lo, is here!

[As Ariel lifts Prospero's hood on the staff, the Cloudy Curtains part, and discover

THE TENTH INNER SCENE

Before high mediæval walls, partly shattered, to pealing of trumpets, appear in their armor, King Henry the Fifth, and his nobles, surrounded by soldiers, with cross-bows and scaling-ladders.

Standing above on a parapet, the King is exhorting them with vehement ardor.

KING HENRY

Once more unto the breach, dear friends, once more,
Or close the wall up with the English dead!

In peace there's nothing so becomes a man

As modest stillness and humility:

But when the blast of war blows in our ears,
Then imitate the action of the tiger;
Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,
Disguise fair nature with hard-favor'd rage;
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect. . . .
Hold hard the breath and bend up every spirit
To his full height. On, on, you noble English,
Whose blood is fet from fathers of War-proof! . . .
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war. And you, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That you are worth your breeding, which I doubt not. . . .

I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. The game's afoot.
Follow your spirit, and upon this charge
Cry, "God for Harry, England, and Saint George!"

THE SOLDIERS

[With a great shout.]

Ho, God for Harry, England, and Saint George!

[As they leap forward, to the blare of trumpets, and begin to scale the ladders,

THE CLOUDY CURTAINS CLOSE

[Instantly Caliban, seizing from the staff the hood of Prospero, shakes it aloft and shouts:]

CALIBAN

Ho, God for Caliban and Setebos!
 War, War for Prosper's throne! Miranda's shrine!
[A booming detonation resounds, and a roar of voices from below.]

THE VOICES

Caliban, Caliban, hail!

[From the throne-entrance Prospero—unhooded—hastens in, surrounded by the Spirits of Ariel, bearing long shining lances. Mounting swiftly the throne and joined by Ariel and Miranda, Prospero calls to Caliban, who—wearing his hood and lifting his staff—strides toward him.]

PROSPERO

[His unhooded features revealing their likeness to Shakespeare's.]

Who wakes my sleep
 With these usurping thunders?

CALIBAN

War and I!
 Now Setebos returns, and thou art fallen!
*[A second detonation booms.
 Red glare bursts from Caliban's cell, and War rushes forth with the Powers of Setebos, clad in his flaring*

habiliments, followed by the groups of Lust and Death.

Bearing lighted torches, amid the roaring of Setebos choruses, flashing fireworks and bombs, they swarm upon the half-obscure stage.

Led by War, the flame-colored hordes clash with the Spirits of Ariel, overcome them, and take captive Miranda, Prospero, and Ariel.

As War holds Miranda in his power, Prospero confronts Caliban who—wearing his hood and raising his staff—exults before him:]

Hail, Prospero! Who now is master-artist!
Who wieldeth now the world?

PROSPERO

Hail, Caliban!

Slumb'ring, from me thou robb'st my hood and staff
Which wield my power; yet not mine art they wield
Without my will: my will thou canst not rob
Nor ravish.

CALIBAN

[With eyes gleaming.]

But Miranda!

PROSPERO

Nay, nor her:
For she is charmed against thy body's rape

By chastity of soul. Thy will and War
May break, but cannot build the world: And One,
Who bore us all within her womb, still lives
To stanch our wounds with her immortal healing.

CALIBAN

Where?

PROSPERO

[Pointing.]

Yonder, on the Yellow Sands! She rises now
And calls across the tides of fleeting change
Her deathless artists of the plastic mind—
My art that builds the beauty of the world.

EPILOGUE

Where Prospero points, the light passes from the pageant of War to the centre of the Yellow Sands.

There, in mellow splendor, a serene female Figure, rising majestic from the altar, calls to the thronging shadows.

THE SPIRIT OF TIME

Children of men, my passionate children, hark!
To-day and Yesterday I am To-morrow:
 Out of my primal dark
 You dawn—my joy, my sorrow.

Lovers of life, you rapturous lovers, lo
The lives you clutch are by my lightnings riven:
 Yea, on my flux and flow,
 Like sea-birds tempest-driven.

Yet from my founts of life, fecund, divine,
Still dauntless lovers dare my dark tribunal,
 Building a common shrine
 To hold their love communal.

So out of War up looms unconquered Art:
 Blind forces rage, but masters rise to mould them.
 Soldiers and kings depart;
 Time's artists—still behold them!

As the Spirit of Time ceases to speak, the light passes to the entrances of the Greek ground-circle, where now—from either side—enters a Pageant of the great Theatres of the world—from the ancient Theatre of Dionysus to the Comedie Francaise—in symbolic groups, with their distinctive banners and insignia. The names of these are blazoned on their group standards, and the groups themselves [like those that follow] are announced from either end of the high balcony above the inner stage by two spirit Trumpeters, the one beneath a glowing disk of the sun, the other beneath a sickle moon.

While these, below, have ranged themselves on the ground-circle and steps above—the groups of War, Lust, and Death have dwindled away in the background darkness—leaving only Prospero, Miranda, and Ariel, grouped in light at the centre.

Then on either wing of the stage, at right and left, appears luminous a colossal mask—the one of Tragedy, the other of Comedy. Through the mouths of these, now come forth, in national pageant groups, the creators of the art of the theatre from antiquity to the verge of the living present: the world-famed actors, dramatists,* producers, musicians, directors, and inventors of its art.

*For details of these Epilogue groups, see Appendix, pages 205-216.

First come the great Actors, in the guise of their greatest rôles—from Thespis and Roscius of old to Irving, Salvini, Coquelin, Booth, of modern times, the comic actors tumbling forth from the Mask of Comedy, the tragic from the Tragic Mask.

They are followed by national groups of the great Dramatists from Æschylus to Ibsen, who pass in review before Prospero.

Among these, with the Elizabethan Dramatists, grouped with Marlowe, Green, Jonson, Beaumont, and Fletcher, and others, appears the modest figure of Shakespeare, at first unemphasized.

For one moment, however, as Shakespeare himself approaches Prospero, he pauses, Prospero rises, and the two figures—strangely counterparts to their beholders—look in each other's eyes: a moment only. For Prospero, slipping off his cloak, lays it on the shoulders of Shakespeare, who sits in Prospero's place, while Prospero moves silently off with the group of Dramatists.

Finally, when these pageants of Time have passed, and the stately Spirit of Time vanished in dark on the Yellow Sands, the only light remains on the figure of Shakespeare—and the two with him: Ariel tiptoe behind him, peering over his shoulder; Miranda beside him, leaning forward, with lips parted to speak.

Then to these, out of the dimness, comes forth Caliban. Gropping, dazed, he reaches his arms toward the dark circle, where the stately Spirit has vanished. In a voice hoarse with feeling, he speaks aloud.

CALIBAN

Lady of the Yellow Sands! O Life! O Time!
Thy tempest blindeth me: Thy beauty baffleth.—
A little have I crawled, a little only
Out of mine ancient cave. All that I build
I botch; all that I do destroyeth my dream.
Yet—yet I yearn to build, to be thine Artist
And stablish this thine Earth among the stars—Beautiful!

[Turning to the light, where the Three are grouped.]

—O bright Beings, help me still!
More visions—visions, Master!

[With gesture of longing, he crouches at Shakespeare's feet, gazing up in his face, which looks on him with tenderness. With Caliban, Miranda too appeals to the Cloaked Figure.]

MIRANDA

[Wistfully.]

—Master?

[To her raised eyes, he returns a pensive smile.]

SHAKESPEARE

[As Prospero]

"Child,

Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
 As I foretold you, were all spirits and
 Are melted into air, into thin air:
 And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
 The cloud-capp'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
 The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
 Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve,
 And, like this unsubstantial pageant faded,
 Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
 As dreams are made on, and our little life
 Is rounded with a sleep."

[Then, while the light focusses and fades in darkness on the pensive form of Shakespeare, the choirs of Ariel's Spirits repeat, unseen, in song:]

THE SPIRITS OF ARIEL

"We are such stuff
 As dreams are made on, and our little life
 Is rounded with a sleep."

FINIS

NOTE: For description of EPILOGUE in the form used at the New York production, 1916, see page 205.

APPENDIX

CONTENTS OF APPENDIX

- 1. FOREWORD
- 2. PERSONS AND PRESENCES (OF THE TEN INNER SCENES)
- 3. INTERLUDES I, II, III
- 4. EPILOGUE
- 5. ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOREWORD

The actors of a Community Masque being members of the community, it becomes the function of the Masque-director to reverse the traditional order of theatrical procedure and—so far as possible—to take the public, as participants, into the confidence of “behind the scenes” beforehand.

If this were a play only [in the Broadway sense], I should gather together my staff and company for a preliminary reading, assign parts, devise plans of rehearsal, and get personally in touch with the comparatively few persons involved in its production. Being, however, a new kind of drama, involving some thousands of persons as actors, and some scores of leaders as a projected staff, it becomes practically necessary to print and publish, before production, not only the foregoing spoken and sung Masque-Proper, but the sketched-in outlines of the non-speaking Interludes which follow.

In the nature of the case, these outlines are preliminary and [though necessarily printed here] are still plastic and susceptible to various modifications. Thus publication at the moment in New York is essentially for the purpose of rendering each of the hundreds of participants more intimately familiar with his or her special relationship [as group participant or group principal] to the work as a whole.

To this is also added the need for making its text and stage-directions available to communities outside of New York, which have already expressed their desire to organize for its production after next May.

An interesting American phase of the New York production is the problem of carrying its community meaning to the still polyglot population, so that steps have been taken for the immediate translation of the Masque into Italian, German, and Yiddish.

By referring to the chart INNER STRUCTURE, the reader will see that it offers a technical solution for the participation of about a dozen national and civic groups within the time limits of the festival, without disintegrating the organic unity of the plot and action of the drama, with which the actions of the various groups are fused and synthesized. This form of technique [the result of some years of thought and experiment in this field] contributes a basis for the future development of the outdoor community art of the theatre, on a scale adapted to modern cities.

The Masque thus becomes, so to speak, a Masque of Masques. For example, the seven-minute Don Giovanni pantomime scene-plot of the Spanish and Italian Action in Interlude II [of which Mr. Ernest Peixotto is the community group-chairman] is being enlarged, under Mr. Peixotto's direction, into the spring festival of the MacDowell Club, performed locally at its clubhouse, lasting an hour and a half, for the Prologue of which the author has written the dialogue.

So each of the other Interlude Actions, necessarily brief in time-limit, is itself a potential Masque or festival, capable of being developed locally into larger proportions. And this is being done in New York in the case of several other of the Interlude Actions.

At the present date, among those who are actively interested in the production side of the Interludes, are the Misses Lewisohn, and their associates of the Neighborhood Playhouse, for interpreting the Egyptian; Mr. Franklin Sargent of the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, in association with members of the Greek Colony, for the Greek; Mr. Arturo Giovannitti [who, as poet, is also translating the Masque into Italian] and members of the Italian colony, for the Roman; Mr. Otto J. Merkel, and members of the German University League, for the German; Mr. Charles A. Donner and members of the Alliance Francaise, for the French; Mr. Rene Wildenstein, Mr.

Peixotto, and members of the Spanish-speaking community, for the Spanish-Italian; the New York Branch of the English Folk-Dance Society, under direction of Mr. Cecil Sharp, for the Interlude of Elizabethan England; the American Academy and National Institute of Arts and Letters [Chairman, Mr. William Dean Howells], for the Epilogue.

As indicated in the Inner Structure Chart, an Action of ancient India* was originally planned for the beginning of Interlude I. This was chiefly devised, in conference with the author and director, by the director of the community Interludes, Mr. Garnet Holme, who has brought to this New York production his very valuable experience in directing outdoor festivals in California and England. Owing, however, to brevity of time and the pressure of organization details, this Action has been omitted from the production in May.

Of the other members of the producing staff of the Interludes, Mrs. Robert Anderson contributes to her direction of the community dances her admirable knowledge of the subject, and Mrs. John W.

*The plan for this India episode is based on a ritual scene of the ancient Hindu drama "Shakuntala," by Kalidasa, translated by Garnet Holme and Arthur W. Ryder, and recently produced by the authors in California. The translation is published by University of California Press, Berkeley, 1914. Those communities that may desire to include this Action in their local festivals should communicate with Mr. Garnet Holme, care of The Shakespeare Celebration, 10 East 43rd Street, New York City.

PROLOGUE
 SETSBORG SACORAY CALIBAN ARIEL MIRANDA PROSPERO

1st INTERLUDE
 INDIA EGYPT GREECE ROME

ACT I
 (ANTONY) (TRIGLUS) (BRUTUS)

2nd INTERLUDE
 GERMANIC FRENCH SPANISH ITALIAN

ACT II
 (HAMLET) (CLOTH OF GOLD) (ROMEO LORENZO FLORIZIO)

3rd INTERLUDE
 ELIZABETHAN ENGLAND

ACT III
 (OP' ARING) (FALSTAFF) (HENRY V)

EPILOGUE
 THEATRES ACTORS DRAMATISTS

SHAKESPEARE

4 HRS., 40 MINUTES -

MUTE FIGURANTS (ABOUT 300)

STAGES A & B OF G

ACTION ON STAGES A & B OF GROUND PLAN

VISIBLE CHORUSES

COMMUNITY DANCES

PANTOMIME ACTING

MASS MOVEMENTS

ACTION ON STAGE C OF GROUND PLAN

Alexander to the Interlude costuming [in association with Mr. Urban and Mr. Jones] the excellent insight and artistry which contributed so much [with the work of her husband, the late President of the Academy] to the impressiveness of the "Joan of Arc" stadium performance at Harvard, and other productions of Maude Adams and Charles Frohman.

In the following descriptions of the Interlude Actions, the numbers of community actors are based on an arbitrary computation [at this date] of a total of 1,500, at least double which number will require to be enlisted to make sure of sufficient persons for the five New York performances. The numbers here printed, however, are purely tentative and are subject to modification. Of the terms used for community actors, the term Participants means those who take part in the Interludes only; Figurants those who also take part in groups of the Masque Proper; Specials those who take part only in the special group, or groups, designated.

In the projected tour of the Masque outside of New York, a modified performance of the Masque, on a smaller scale, when acted without the Interludes, will require, in local community actors, only the Figurants.

It will be evident, I think, to the reader, that the organization of a community for a Masque performance on so large a scale is a special technique, only recently in process of development. As a contribution to this technique, the appended Community Organization Chart has been drawn up by my sister, Hazel MacKaye, who has brought to it her experience, of several years, in organizing and directing community pageants and masques, some of them of her own authorship.

Space and time do not permit of further comment in this Foreword on many important social relationships and reactions involved in this new community art. The accompanying photograph, however, of a Community Masque audience—150,000 citizens of Saint Louis gathered in May, 1914, to witness the Pageant and Masque of Saint Louis, in which over 7,000 of their fellow-citizens took part—may be suggestive to the imagination of the reader. On the background may be seen, at centre, the thousand-foot stage, and, at left and right, the tents of the community actors, men and women.

Space and time also do not permit of any adequate emphasis upon the enormous importance, and contribution to this growing art-form, of music in its community aspects. In this respect, the splendid pioneering work of Mr. Harry H. Barnhart in creating community choruses in Rochester and New York City is fundamentally significant. In the

A COMMUNITY MASQUE AUDIENCE

Copyright, 1914, by E. O. Thaling, St. Louis
150,000 SPECTATORS OF THE PAGEANT AND MASQUE OF SAINT LOUIS, IN WHICH 7,500 CITIZENS TOOK PART, MAY, 1914
[IN BACKGROUND, CENTRE, THE STAGE; RIGHT AND LEFT, TENTS OF ACTORS]

creative field of composition, rich in its manifold promise, Mr. Arthur Farwell, director of the New York Music School Settlement, and composer of the music of this Masque, has devoted probably more attention than any other American composer to this community type of musical art.

To the Shakespeare Celebration of New York, since its origin last year in activities of the Drama League, Miss Mary Porter Beegle, of Barnard College, has contributed her unflagging zest and enthusiasm, Mr. Howard Kyle his disinterested, manifold services, Miss Kate Oglebay her remarkable thoroughness in organizing the Supplementary Celebrations.

In his original and deeply based work of experiment, through channels of the People's Institute and the School for Community Centre Workers, Mr. John Collier has shown fundamental leadership in a field all-important to the community purposes of this Masque: the modern economics and organization of coöperative art.

As this Foreword goes to press, Prof. Richard Ordynski has joined Mr. Urban in the work of the Masque's New York production.

To Mr. Everard Thompson, producers and committees alike are indebted for his unfailing, friendly resourcefulness.

As references to the reader curious to study the art of the theatre in the eras touched upon in these Interludes, a lengthy Bibliography might well be submitted. For this Foreword, it may suffice to refer to three very useful works, in several volumes, viz: "The Drama," Editor Alfred Bates, Historical Publishing Company [a dozen volumes]; "The Art of the Theatre," Karl Manzius, Scribners, [5 volumes]; "The Theatre, Its Development in France and England, and a History of Its Greek and Latin Origins," Charles Hastings, London, Duckworth, 1902 [and Lippincott].

The beneficial possibilities of community festival art and organization are, of course, commensurate with the time and opportunity afforded for their development. As mentioned in the Preface, the time for the New York production has, by unavoidable circumstance, become far too brief to accomplish, between the present date and the 23rd of May the deep social reactions potential in this festival. A year, instead, for the work of preparation would be none too much. It is hoped, however, that the production of this Masque may at least help to establish the festival movement in New York on a sound and perennial community basis.

PERCY MACKAYE.

New York, March 26, 1916.

THE MASQUE CELEBRATION ORGANIZATION-PLAN.

PERSONS AND PRESENCES
OF THE TEN INNER SCENES
[Enacted by the Spirits of Ariel.]

FIRST INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

Antony
Cleopatra
Charmian
Eros

PANTOMIME GROUPS

Roman Soldiers
Egyptian Populace
Flutists
Harpists
Wine Bearers

SECOND INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

Cressida
Her Attendant
Pandarus
Boy
Troilus

MUTE PERSONS

Hecuba
Helen Æneas
Antenor
Hector
Paris
Helenus

PANTOMIME GROUPS

Trojan Warriors
Trojan Populace

THIRD INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

Brutus
Lucius, a boy
Ghost of Cæsar

MUTE PRESENCES

Shapes in the Darkness

FOURTH INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

SAINT AGNES [An Image]
A SHEPHERD [Impersonated by Prospero]
A SHEPHERD BOY [Impersonated by Ariel]
OTHER SHEPHERDS

FIFTH INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

Hamlet
Horatio
Marcellus

MUTE PERSONS

The Ghost of Hamlet's Father

SIXTH INNER SCENE

[Derivative from Shakespeare]

PANTOMIME PERSONS AND GROUPS

King Henry the Eighth, of England
King Francis the First, of France
Their Soldiers and Followers

SEVENTH INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

Benvolio
Mercutio
Romeo
Juliet
Lorenzo
Florizel
Perdita

MUTE PERSONS

Jessica

EIGHTH INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

Orlando
Jacques
Duke
Adam

PANTOMIME GROUPS

Foresters of Arden

NINTH INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS

Sir Hugh Evans [as Fairy]
Sir John Falstaff
Mistress Ford
Mistress Page
Mistress Quickly [as Fairy]
Pistol [as Hobgoblin]

PANTOMIME GROUPS

Fairies [Counterfeited by Followers of Sir Hugh]

TENTH INNER SCENE

SPEAKING PERSONS AND GROUPS

King Henry the Fifth
His Soldiers and Followers

INTERLUDE I

FIRST ACTION: EGYPTIAN

COMMUNITY ACTORS [148]

Comprise

PARTICIPANTS [75]

FIGURANTS [73]

Osiris, the god of summer and fecundity.

Worshippers of Osiris [Men and Women].

7 Groups, each group comprising

15 Dancers [Parts & Figs.]

5 Drum-players, Followers [Parts and Figs.]

1 Priest Leader [Participant]

Total Dancers	105
-------------------------	-----

“ Drum-players	35
--------------------------	----

140

“ Leaders	7
---------------------	---

147

Osiris	1
------------------	---

148

THEME

Egyptian Worshippers of the god Osiris, B. C. 1000, celebrate his resurrection from death by a dramatic ritual, symbolizing how the seven portions of his rended body unite again at his rebirth.

ACTION

At the deep pealing of gongs, from each of the three entrances to the ground-circle, two diverging Processions issue forth, a seventh issuing from the cell of Caliban. All are dressed in robes and concealing masks of black.

Slowly, to the rhythmic beat of Egyptian drums [borne by the last five in each procession], by seven separate routes, they move out upon the Yellow Sands, and so converge toward the altar at the centre.

Within about a rod of the altar they pause, while their seven Priest-Leaders move forward—each bearing a fire urn—to the altar, on which an immense circular disk lies. On the disk, a prone Shape lies concealed beneath a black cloth.

Bowing before the altar, the seven Priests then rise and, mounting the steps, extend their arms to touch the rim of the disk. Thus—their black masks turned skyward—they raise their shrill voices in a mournful Egyptian chant.

Moving then backward to the ground, they drop incense within their seven urns, from which rise seven pillars of smoke, lighted by the glow of fire beneath.

In this increasing glow, the black Shape on the disk stirs, slowly rises beneath its dark cloth, and extends upward its hidden arms. During this, the drums beat from a low muffled cadence increasingly to a loud rolling rhythm, to which now—at a shrill choral cry from all the worshippers—the black cloth on the central Shape sloughs to its feet, revealing—in a burst of radiant splendor—the flame-bright form of the god Osiris.

In tall shining mitre, he raises his ox-herd's whip and shepherd's crook. With these, to the joyous cries of his Worshippers, he bestows with archaic gesture a seven-fold sign of benediction.

Once more then mounting the altar steps, the Priests step forth from their black robes and masks in their own garments of yellow gold. Thus, touching again the rim of the disk, they begin to revolve it—at first slowly.*

And now at its first motion, Osiris begins to dance.

In this dance he expresses the former beneficence of his life, the sufferings of his death, the rending of his body into seven parts and finally the joy of his resurrection.*

*The revolving of the disk, of course, is apparent only, not real. Actually, the disk remains motionless; it appears to revolve because of the motion of the Priests around it.

In rhythm to the primitive music, the Priests revolve the disk to the dancing movement of the god.

In this revolving movement his Worshippers below join in a dance on the ground (expressive of the blending of the seven parts of his body), where one by one successively the seven Processions encircle the altar and the dancing Osiris. As they do so, they slough off their dark garments, weaving thus a whirling movement in which the proportion of black ever diminishes while the golden yellow increases, until finally—in a blaze only of gold-yellow radiance—the Priests raise aloft on its pedestal the disk, still spinning, while the flame-red god, still dancing, is borne away in procession by his joyous Worshippers, shouting aloud their shrill cries of “Osiris!”

When all have disappeared through the south gate of the circle, Prospero on his throne speaks to Ariel,† announcing the Second Action of the Interlude—his art of the drama in Greece.

* See “Kings and Gods of Egypt,” Alexandre Moret; pp. 69-108.

† Similarly before each of the Actions of each Interlude, Prospero makes a brief explanatory comment to Ariel (and thus to the audience).

INTERLUDE I

SECOND ACTION: GREEK

COMMUNITY ACTORS [175]

Comprise

PARTICIPANTS [100]

Individuals [2]	Actors [9]
Sophocles	Antigone
The Choregus*	Ismene
Friends of Sophocles [20]	Creon
Aristophanes	Haemon
Socrates	Eurydice
Anaxagoras	Teiresias
Alcibiades	A Watchman
Euripides	A Messenger
Fifteen Others	A Second Messenger
Chorus [60]	Trainers and Stage
Choreutai [In four bands, fifteen in each band.]	Leaders [5]
	Chorodidaskalos [Chorus Master]
Musicians [4]	Orchestrodidaskalos
Four Flute-players	[Dancing Master]
	Choryphaios [Stage Cho- rus Leader]
	Two Parastatai [His As- sistant Leaders]

*The Choregus was the Producer, usually a man of great wealth.

FIGURANTS [75]

Athenian Audience [75]

Pericles

Aspasia

Seventy-three Others.

THEME

Sophocles rehearses the Second Chorus of his drama "Antigone" in the Theatre of Dionysus, at Athens, B. C. 440.

ACTION

At the sounding of Interlude trumpets, the light passes to the great gates of the ground-circle, from which simultaneously two main groups enter.

From the right enter Athenian Citizens, accompanying Pericles and Aspasia. These move forward to the north portion of the Yellow Sands [between the centre of stage B and the altar] and there form the semicircle of an antique audience, which faces the altar and the modern audience. Among these, two seats are placed for Aspasia and Pericles.

From the left gate, meanwhile, has entered the Choregus [producer of the play], in conversation with Sophocles, followed closely by a group of twenty friends, among whom are Socrates, Aristophanes, Anaxagoras, Alcibiades, and Euripides. These move toward the centre. There Sophocles summons the Chorodidaskalos [Chorus Master], and the Orchestrodidaskalos [Dancing Master] to confer with him and the Choregus. Returning part way toward the left gate, the Chorus Master calls aloud "Antigone!"

Enter, then [left], the Actor of the part of Antigone, followed by a group of Actors comprising the impersonators of Ismene, Creon, Haemon, Eurydice, Teiresias, a Watchman, and two Messengers. With these, who carry their classic masks in their hands, the Choregus confers in pantomime, directs them to join Sophocles at the altar, and then calls aloud: "Choreutai!"

Thereupon enter the Choreutai [Members of the Chorus], sixty in number, in four bands, fifteen in each band. Preceded by the Choryphaios [Stage Chorus Leader] and four Flute-players [one for each band], escorted by two Parastatai [Assistant Leaders], the Chorus march in military order first south [each band in three ranks of five men] till they are opposite the altar, then east [each band in five files of three men], till they halt near the altar.

Here, after Sophocles has greeted Pericles and Aspasia nearby in the impromptu audience [which his group of friends have now joined], after he has chatted with Socrates, and been chaffed by Aristophanes and Alcibiades, he turns with the Choregus to conduct the rehearsal.

After giving directions to Antigone and Ismene, who rehearse in pantomime a snatch of their first scene together, and after a few instructions to Hæmon, Euripides, and Teiresia., Sophocles now bids the Choregus direct the last few passages between Creon and the Messenger, just before the Second Chorus in the play.

They do so in pantomime; Creon, with final threatening gesture to the Messenger, makes his exit, and the Messenger—thanking the gods for his escape from Creon's anger—also departs.

And now, by direction of Sophocles, the Chorus Master and the Master of Dance make signal to the Chorus and the Flute-players; Sophocles steps back near Pericles and his other friends: the Flutists begin playing and, under leadership of the two masters of choral song and of dance, the Chorus—with vigorous, rhythmic cadence of their athletic bodies—perform an austere dance about the altar, raising to its measure their choral song:

CHORUS

The words of this chorus are translated here by the author from the Second Chorus of Sophocles' play "Antigone."

Many are the wonders of time, but the mightiest wonder is man;

Man ! for he maketh his path with the south wind, over the surges

Down where the storm-white billows

Loom to devour him: Yea,

And Earth, the immortal, the oldest of gods,

The untoilsome, he tameth with toiling horses

Dark where his turning ploughshare

Plougheth from age unto age.

Birds, O the wild-hearted birds, and the breeds of the savage wood

Deep in his woven nets he hath snared, and the broods of the bright sea

Leadeth he likewise captive—

Master of masters, Man !

And high on the hills he hath tracked to her wild

The shaggy-maned horse and yoked her in harness;

Tireless, too, hath his spirit

Tamed the wild mountain bull.

*Words, and the wind of great thought, and the mood that mouldeth a state,
These hath he mastered, and knoweth to parry the white frost arrow's
Pitiless barb, and the pouring
Arrows of purple rain.
All, all hath he mastered, and all that may come
He meeteth with cunning and power; but only
Death hath he failed to master:
Death is the master of man.*

As they conclude, a runner comes hastening from the right gate, calling "Pericles!"

Pericles rises, receives in pantomime the message of the runner, and indicates to Sophocles that he must return to the city.

He and Aspasia and their followers depart [right gate]. With a gesture, then, to the Choregus, Sophocles dismisses the rehearsal; he and his friends follow the others; the Chorus forms again in files and ranks, moving off with the playing Flute-players to the right Interlude gate, where all disappear.

INTERLUDE I

THIRD ACTION: ROMAN

COMMUNITY ACTORS [150]

Comprise

PARTICIPANTS AND SPECIALS

Individuals [2]

Caligula, Emperor of Rome

Naevoleia, a female Mime

Roman Patricians [21]Roman Populace [80]Musicians [10]

Two Players of Flutes

" " " Citherns

" " " Lyres

" " " Scabillae [foot cymbals]

" " " Shields and Cymbals

Pantomime Actors [7]Pantimimus, announcing the Pantomime, "Hercules and the Sphinx."

Two Boy Pantomimi

Hercules, the demigod

Silenus, the satyr

Servus, a slave

Omphale, a Nymph [afterward disguised as the Sphinx]

Mimes and Dancers [32]

16 Boy-Mimes, as Fauns

16 Girl-Mimes, as Nymphs

THEME

The Emperor Caligula witnesses a farcical comedy in pantomime, enacted in a street of Rome, A. D. 40.

ACTION

As the last of the Greeks disappear right, the Interlude trumpets sound at the left gate. There immediately resounds a great shout and clamor of voices, crying aloud: "Caligula! Salve, Imperator!" The gate is thrown open, and the Roman populace throng in, accompanying—in varied groups of squalor and poverty—the gorgeous Patricians that escort the Emperor Caligula, borne in a chariot, behind which follow a troupe of Roman Pantomime Actors and Mimes who carry a light platform with curtain, which they set up [centre, north], facing the altar.

The curtain is painted to represent the street exterior of a house, in the Pompeian-Roman style. In the centre, set in a lintel frame, is depicted a wide squat door, the stage platform forming its sill. Above the door is a window casement. Both door and window are devised to open and close practically. The top of the curtain is designed as an over-jutting tiled roof.

With the Pantomimists come a group of Musicians, consisting of players on flutes, shields and cymbals, citherns and lyres, and two who wear fastened to their ankles pairs of scabilla, a kind of cymbal for the feet.

The Populace and Patricians meantime cross to right of centre [further southwest].

In the chariot beside Caligula rides Naevoleia, a female Mime, whom Caligula—with amorous playfulness—kisses and crowns with gold laurel as she alights. Alighting with her, he himself helps to attire her in the garments worn in her part of the nymph Omphale in the stage pantomime to follow. Doing so, he thrusts aside—with a glance and gesture of jealous anger—the Chief Actor, who [in the part of Hercules] approaches to assist.

Caligula then escorts her to the improvised stage where she teasingly parts with him to play her rôle in the Comedy. Caligula returns to his chariot.

And now the Comedy is announced by the appearance [through the curtain door] of Pantomimus, a particolored figure, garbed antiquely as a harlequin, wreathed and masked.*

Behind Pantomimus, enter [on either side of him] two little Pantomimi, half his height, exactly resembling him in every particular. These, as with skipping step and motion Pantomimus makes his introduction, imitate his every movement of wand and gesture.

By his action, which is accompanied by flute, cymbal, and scabilla players, Pantomimus describes very briefly the plot of the comedy which is to follow, viz:

THE SPHINX AND HERCULES†

THEME

Hercules, lured by the nymph Omphale to live with her a woman's way of life, becomes terribly bored, rebels, and vows to a statue of the Sphinx to resume his manly exploits. By the help of the satyr Silenus, however, who makes Hercules drunk, Omphale—in guise of the Sphinx—wins Hercules back and marries him.

*In one hand Pantomimus carries a wand resembling a caduceus, but differing from that of Mercury in that the heads of the twining snakes are carved as little masks of comedy, and the tip of the wand, to which the flying wings are affixed, is the shining disk of a mirror, into which at times Pantomimus peers quaintly at his reflection.

†The Pantomime is adapted from a Roman Interlude by the author in his drama "Sappho and Phaon."

feeble ennui, but afterward with increasing determination, now rises in grandiose disgust, and—snatching from her his lion's skin and club—repudiates her and the Nymphs.

Flinging down the sheep's pelt and setting his foot upon it, he breaks his distaff in pieces and, threatening Omphale, drives the Nymphs off the scene, left. [During this excitement, Servus—who has been standing aside—seizes the heap of wool, and exit with it in flight.] Turning then to the image of the Sphinx, Hercules expresses in dumb-show how, lured by the riddle of the Sphinx, he aspires to fight and conquer the world for her sake. Laying his club and lion's skin devoutly at the foot of the column, he kneels, embraces it, and raises then his arms in supplication to the Sphinx.

Thus kneeling, he is watched furtively at a distance by Omphale, who, at his outburst, has run to the edge of the foliage, right. Hercules, rising, puts on his lion's skin, and brandishing his club heroically for the benefit of the immovable Sphinx, goes off, left.

Immediately Omphale seizes from amid the foliage a sylvan pipe, and blows on it a brief, appealing ditty. At this, from behind the foliage, run out boy-mimes, in the guise of Fauns; she gesticulates to them beseechingly. They run back and presently return, advancing to pipe-music, accompanying and leading a goat, astride of which sits Silenus, an old grotesque Satyr, in mask.

Omphale greets him joyfully and helps him down from the goat. She then describes to him in pantomime the late outburst of Hercules—his breaking the spindle, his enamoration for the Sphinx, etc., and prays his aid and advice.

Silenus pauses an instant in philosophical absorption, then gives a leap and skip. Omphale, seeing that he has hit on some plan, expresses her pleasure and inquires what his plan may be. Silenus bids her call a slave. Omphale claps her hands toward the left entrance. Servus enters. Silenus signs to him. Servus goes back and returns immediately, rolling in a wine-cask, from which he fills an antique beaker. From this Silenus sips and approves. He then points to the Sphinx and asks if be that of which Hercules is enamored. Omphale assents. Silenus then directs Servus to lift the Sphinx down from the pillar. Servus does so, revealing its hollow interior as he carries it. Silenus, drawing Omphale's attention to this fact of its hollowness, opens the door in the curtain, and commands Servus to bear the Sphinx within. Servus does so. Silenus, then, pointing to the window above the door, whispers in the ear of Omphale, who, delighted, enters the door after Servus. Silenus closes the door as Hercules reënters, left.

The hero has discarded his woman's garb, and comes forward now dressed as a man, with lion's skin and club—his mask changed to one of an exultant and martial expression.

Silenus greets him with obsequious and cunning servility and offers him wine. Hercules, with good-natured hauteur, condescends to accept the cup which he offers. While he is drinking, the window above in the curtain opens, and Omphale thrusts her head out, revealing [within] beside her own, the Sphinx's head. Silenus secretly motions her to be cautious. Seeing his gesture, Hercules looks up, but not swiftly enough to detect Omphale, who withdraws. Again looking forth, as he turns to drink again, Omphale mocks Hercules below, dropping wisps of wool on his head, the source of which, however, Hercules fails to detect. Silenus explains that the wool is really feathers, which fell from a bird flying overhead.

Hercules now, under the sly persuasions of the old Satyr, grows more pleased with the wine, and becomes drunk—as he becomes so, expressing to Silenus, with increasing familiarity and descriptive force, all the mighty exploits he intends to accomplish in the service of the incomparable Sphinx, whose living prototype he declares he will immediately set forth in search of.

Starting now, humorously drunk, to depart [right] he is detained by Silenus, who points upward to the window, where now the blank, immovable face of the Sphinx looks forth at the sky. Hercules, bewildered, asks Silenus if it is really the Sphinx herself and alive? Silenus assents and proves his assertion by pointing to the deserted pedestal. At this, Hercules addresses the Sphinx, with impassioned gestures. The Sphinx remains immovable. Hercules becomes discouraged. Silenus then puts a pipe in his hand, and tells him to play it. He does so, and is rewarded by a slow, preternatural look from the Sphinx. At this he plays more vociferously and, surrounded by the little piping Fauns, performs a serenade beneath the casement, while Silenus, looking on from a distance, rubs his hands with sly delight.

The serenade ends by Hercules, on his knees, imploring the Sphinx to come down. The Sphinx at length consents and the casement closes. Silenus calls his Fauns away to the edge of the foliage, and Hercules goes to the door.

For a moment nothing happens and Hercules knocks on the steps impatiently with his club. Then the door opens and enter the Sphinx—dressed below in the Greek garments of Omphale, but from the waist upward consisting of the sitting image of the Sphinx, beneath whose closed wings the arms of Omphale are thrust through and have place for motion.

The Sphinx, its tail swinging behind, descends the steps, reticent and impassive, attended by Hercules, drunk and enamored.

Then at the foot of the steps, to the accompaniment from the foliage of the piping Fauns, who play softly a variation of the serenade theme, Hercules woos the Sphinx, who, at the proper moment, succumbs to his entreaties. After embracing him amorously, she extends her hand to him. He seizes it to kiss; she withdraws it and signifies that he must put a ring on the ring-finger. Hercules hunts about him in vain for the ring. Calling then to Silenus and the Fauns, he explains to them the situation.

Silenus, producing a ring, hands it to Hercules, who puts it on the finger of the Sphinx.

Instantly a clash of cymbals is heard from the left, and a clapping of palms from the right, and re-enter the dancing Nymphs, who encircle the scene just as Servus removes from the bride the great mask of the Sphinx, thereby revealing her to the astounded Hercules—as Omphale, who embraces him, exulting in her ring.

Just as she is embracing and kissing him, the scene is interrupted by a cry of jealous rage from

Caligula who springs from his chariot, calling: "Hercules!" At his gesture slaves run before him, seize Hercules, and hale him toward Caligula, who bids them whip him. Frightened, for an instant, Omphale [the Mime Naevoleia] then hastens as if to intercede, but, seeing Caligula's expression, taunts him with toying bravado, and finally as he kisses her makes him burst with her into laughter, as Hercules is dragged off through the hooting crowd, flogged by Caligula's slaves. [During the latter part of this Roman Action, LUST has appeared at the mouth of Caliban's cell and looked on. His voice now joins the loud laughter of Caligula.]

Dispersing in confusion, the Pantomime Actors remove their curtain and platform [right] into the darkness, which now envelops also Caligula and the Roman populace.

END OF INTERLUDE I

INTERLUDE II

FIRST ACTION: GERMANIC

COMMUNITY ACTORS [150]

Comprise

PARTICIPANTS [150]

Individuals [2]

Forerunner [Einschreier] Out-crier [Ausschreier]

Pantomime Actors [6] Musicians [10]

Doctor Faustus Ten Pipers

An Apprentice Symbolic Group [22]

Lucifer Doctors [8]

Two Devils Priests [4]

Helena Artists [9]

Citizens of Nüremberg [110]

Melancholia [1]

Men and Women [70]

Apprentices [40]

THEME

On a street of Nüremberg, in their Shrovetide festival, a band of Apprentices enact, on a wheeled stage, a pantomime scene from an early version of "Doctor Faustus." Time: Sixteenth century.

ACTION

At Prospero's final words in Act I, the playing of pipes is heard at the right Interlude Gates, where enter a band of Apprentices, accompanying a wheeled street-stage, drawn by donkeys with bells and set with a three-fold scene of Earth, Heaven, and Hell. Some of the Apprentices are masked, some disguised as fools. They enter, singing an old German folk song, and march to the centre of the ground-circle (between the altar and the south entrance), where the stage pauses. Before them has hastened a forerunner (Einschreier), blowing a horn and shouting: "Schauspieler! Doctor Faustus!"

Along with them, Pipers accompany their singing. Behind them follow folk of Nüremberg, gaping peasants and merry-making young people.

From the left gate, meanwhile [in obscurer light], enters a graver group, clad symbolically as Doctors of Learning, Priests, and Artists, accompanying another wheeled vehicle, the stage of which is wholly curtained from view.

These stop at some distance from the former group, and look on from a place of shadow.

And now, where the first stage has paused in a place of brighter glow, the Actors appear and begin their pantomime.

Doctor Faustus appears on the Middle Stage, Earth. There, amid his astronomical instruments, he greets the gaping crowd and points a telescope toward the place of Heaven. Suddenly a comet flashes above the stage. An Apprentice inquires the reason. Doctor Faustus explains it by revealing its two fathers—the Sun and the Moon, which now appear shining simultaneously in Heaven.

At this sorcery, Lucifer comes from Hell, signifies to Faustus that his hour has come, and that he must follow him. Faustus begs a last wish, which Lucifer reluctantly grants. He begs to see once more his beloved Helena of Troy.

Then in Heaven appears Helena, who comes to Faustus on Earth and embraces him. But now Lucifer—summoning two tailed devils with pitchforks—bids them drag Faustus from the arms of Helena, who flees back to Heaven, disappearing there, as Faustus is prodded and haled to the up-bursting flames of Hell, amid the exultant laughter of Lucifer.

At this finale, the stage and its audience moves off through the left gate, while the graver Symbolic Group—crossing right in deep shadow—pauses at the centre.

There, for a moment, the curtains of their pageant stage are drawn, revealing—in mystic light—a dim-glowing tableau of Albrecht Dürer's Melancholia.

As this pales into darkness, the Group with its curtained stage moves vaguely off, and vanishes through the right gate of the Interlude.

INTERLUDE II

SECOND ACTION: FRENCH

COMMUNITY ACTORS [150]

Comprise

PARTICIPANTS [50]

FIGURANTS [100]

Individuals [4]

Francis I, of France	Heralds [10: Figurants]
Henry VIII, of England	French [5]
French Tourney-rider	English [5]
English Tourney-rider

Nobles and Courtiers [88: Figurants] Servants and Followers [48: Participants]

French [44]	French [24]
English [44]	English [24]

THEME*

To celebrate Peace between their nations, after long war, Francis I of France and Henry VIII of England meet on the Field of the Cloth of Gold [A. D. 1520], and hold a tournament.

ACTION

After the mystic tableau of the Melancholia has departed, a peal of trumpets from the Interlude gates [right and left] ushers in a pageant of contrasted splendor.

In the left gateway appear the Heralds of the French, in the right, of the English.

Then [to music of the unseen orchestra, above, playing the instrumental music only of the Chorus "Glory and Serenity," which later is sung by voices in Act II], enter, on horseback, the two Kings, Francis I and Henry VIII, accompanied by their Nobles and Servants.

All are clad in golds and yellows.

On the banners of the English is depicted St. George and the Dragon; on the banners of the French—the lilies of France.

*This Theme inheres in an excerpt from Shakespeare's "King Henry VIII," Act I, Scene I, quoted by Ariel as Prologue to the Sixth Inner Scene of the Masque, for which the actual dialogue of no Shakespeare Scene dealing with France appears so appropriate for the Masque's uses as a pantomime based on this excerpt from Henry VIII.

The servants set up at centre [just south of Caliban's cell] a gorgeous canopy with two thrones, in which the two Kings, dismounting, take their seats, the French followers grouped on the left, the English on the right.

Then to the royal presence, a Herald summons, by trumpet call, two Tourney-riders [French and English], who come riding in armor, from the south gate, on horses caparisoned with their national colors and symbols.

Taking their places, at signal again of the Herald, to shouts of the spectators, they ride at each other with set lances, in a mock battle—which comprises two actions.

In the first action, the French rider is unhorsed, in the second, the English rider.

During both actions, the English cry "St. George for England!" the French "Vive la France!"

Between the two actions, the French King rises and toasts the English King, to acclamations of the French.

After the second action, King Henry compliments King Francis, to acclamations of the English.

Then, as the two Kings clasp hands, both sides shout aloud: "God save the King!" and "Vive le Roi!" raising aloft their banners and emblems.

At the climax of this demonstration, the invisible orchestra resumes the march of "Glory and Serenity," to which the Kings, remounting their horses, ride off side by side, followed by their English and French suites, now commingled, disappearing through the south gateway.

INTERLUDE II

THIRD ACTION: SPANISH-ITALIAN

COMMUNITY ACTORS [150]

Comprise

PARTICIPANTS [150]

[NO FIGURANTS]

Individuals [2]	Improvised Comedy
The Doge of Venice	Actors [6]
The Spanish Ambassador	Il Capitano
Venetian Nobles [24]	Arlecchino
Spanish Courtiers [24]	Il Commandatore
Venetian Populace [94]	Pantalone
	Brighella
	Columbina

THEME

On the plaza of St. Marks in Venice [A. D., about 1630], a troop of Improvised Comedy Actors [of the Commedia dell' Arte] enact before the Doge and the Spanish Ambassador, amid the populace, during a festa, a pantomime scene depicting an adventure of Don Giovanni.

ACTION

When the last of the gold-clad French and English have departed through the South Gate, a chiming of church-bells from the gates of the north [right and left] gives signal for the entrance there of an Italian Festa.

From the right, enters the Doge with his Venetian nobles, accompanied by the Italian populace; from the left, the Spanish Ambassador and his Suite, accompanied by a troop of Improvised Comedy Actors, who set up a platform on wooden horses before the Doge and the Ambassador where they meet and greet each other, at right of centre [north].

Here six Actors mount the platform, at the back of which is a curtain, divided in the middle.

These are Il Capitano [the Captain], Arlecchino [Harlequin], Il Commandatore [the Commander], Pantalone [Pantaloon], Brighella, and Columbina [Columbine]. They all pass behind the curtain, through the folds in the middle.

After a moment's prelude of stringed instruments, then, the Pantomime begins.

First, in semi-darkness, HARLEQUIN appears, carrying a lighted lantern on the end of a sword. At a noise of laughter from behind the curtain he stops and trembles. The laughter sounds again, deep and harsh; Harlequin trembles so violently that the lantern falls and goes out.

In the dimness, enter Il Capitano in the part of DON GIOVANNI, muffled in an immense cloak. Harlequin falls on his back, feigning death, but keeping his sword pointing upward. Stumbling against him, Don Giovanni draws his sword and strikes the sword of Harlequin, who leaps up. They begin a duel, in the midst of which they suddenly recognize each other as friends and embrace.

Enter now [bringing lanterns, which illumine the stage more brightly] PANTALON and BRIGHELLA. Both are wrapped in cloaks.

Greeting Don Giovanni, who returns the greeting, Pantalon explains that he has a rendezvous with a beautiful young lady [the head of Columbine having peered momentarily through the curtain]; that he will make a certain sign to call her; that he must be cautious, as she has a fierce and suspicious father. Don Giovanni becomes very interested, and confides that he, too, must attend a rendezvous, for which he needs a disguise. For this, he persuades Pantalon to change cloaks with him. They do so, their servants also exchanging cloaks.

Exeunt then Pantaloon and Brighella.

Don Giovanni now, approaching the curtain, makes the aforesaid sign described by Pantaloon. At this, enter COLUMBINE, who mistakes him for Pantaloon and approaches him lovingly. He allows her to do so, but soon—opening his cloak—he terrifies her by his wrong identity. However, he is handsomer than Pantaloon, and quickly wins her for himself. In this Harlequin delightedly assists him.

Finally, just as Columbine succumbs and goes to his arms, her father, THE COMMANDER, enters. Seeing her in Don Giovanni's arms, he bursts into terrible anger, draws his sword, and attacks the lover. Harlequin tries to prevent him but fails.

Putting the frightened Columbine behind him, Don Giovanni returns the attack with his sword, fights and suddenly kills the Commander, who falls motionless.

In terror, Columbine and Harlequin scream and run out [through the curtain], leaving Don Giovanni standing with one foot and his sword-point prodding the dead body.

To screams and shudderings also from the horrified onlookers of the populace, darkness falls on the stage.

Then, as suddenly—in a burst of light—the Actors come trooping forth all together in laughter, make faces and comic gestures at the people, remove their curtain and stage, and run off [right], to merry twanging of instruments, followed by the Doge, Ambassador, and populace.

END OF INTERLUDE II

INTERLUDE III

In the New York production in May, 1916, the performance of this Interlude will be arranged by members of the New York City Centre of the U. S. A. Branch of the English Folk Dance Society, under the personal direction of Mr. Cecil J. Sharp, who has devised the Action of this Interlude, and has worded the description of it—in conference with the author—as here printed.

ELIZABETHAN ENGLAND

Action Continuous, in 8 Successive Episodes

COMMUNITY ACTORS [about 400]

Comprise

PARTICIPANTS AND FIGURANTS

Individuals	Tideswell Procession: [100]
Sun	May Tree Procession: [100]
Frost	Morris Dance Group: [25]
May Queen	Dancers: 16
Hobby Horse Dancer	Attendants: 9
Club-Man	Hobby Horse Group: [25]
Fool	Dancers: 15
Witch	Attendants: 10
King	Tumblers and Jugglers: [25]
Queen	Rustic Play-Actors: [25]
Noah	Winter Group: [50]
Noah's Wife	Spring Group: [50]

INTERLUDE III

THEME

Celebration of an Elizabethan May Day Festival on the outskirts of an English town.

ACTION

I: CONTEST BETWEEN SPRING AND WINTER

A group of 25 young men, representing Winter, all dressed in close-fitting black garments, enter from Caliban's cell. They carry a ball and, commanded by one of their number—Frost—advance slowly and dejectedly and lie down near the centre of the ground guarding the ball. A group of 25 young men, dressed in tight-fitting green garments, representing Spring, enter through the right Interlude Gate. Headed by one of their number—Sun—they come forward running and shouting. Winter* rise and stand in defence of the ball. A scuffle ensues and the ball is released from the scrimmage. It is then kicked about by both sides, Spring trying to force it toward the water,† Winter repelling it therefrom. Sun and Frost encourage their respective supporters but do not touch the ball. Groups of villagers come in, by twos and threes [20 to 25 in number], and join the ranks of Spring, who are thus enabled to overpower Winter. Eventually, one of the Spring group secures the ball, holds it aloft and, surrounded by his followers, runs toward the water. Winter follow, fatigued and languid. As the Spring man approaches the water, maidens, 10 or 12 in number, enter from various quarters and swell the group. The ball is then raised and ceremonially thrown into the water; whereupon, the girls join Spring in hunting Winter back again into their cave.

*The words Winter and Spring refer to the respective Groups.

†The water is represented by the blue ground, beyond the verge of the Yellow Sands.

2: PROCESSIONAL DANCE THROUGH VILLAGE

While Winter is being driven off the arena, a procession of Villagers, comprising 50 couples [i. e., partners], enter through South Interlude Gate and dance the Tideswell Processional Morris. The dancers include men, women, and children of all classes and are dressed in their holiday clothes, plentifully bedecked with flowers and ribbons. Each carries two handkerchiefs, one in each hand, or, if preferred, boughs of May blossom. They dance round the arena in a spiral until the front couple reach the centre; whereupon, all raise their arms and shout on the last chord of the tune. Spring and all the actors already on the ground join in the procession at the rear, or wherever they can squeeze in.

3: REVELS AND AMUSEMENTS

Upon the completion of the dance, the dancers disperse noisily all over the ground. The children play Singing Games, e. g., "Oats and Beans," "Here We Come Gathering Nuts (i. e. Knots) in May," "Old Sir Roger," etc., in different parts of the ground—not too close together. Booths and stalls are brought in, a rustic stage* is set up, tumblers and jugglers, surrounded by groups of spectators, give their performances, and all unite in a scene of general merriment. Couples, each consisting of a boy and a girl, carry May garlands, sing May day songs, and solicit offerings. The young men chase the girls and kiss them "under the green," i. e., while raising the boughs of green over their heads.

4: MAY POLE PROCESSION

The following procession enters from South Interlude Gate.

- [1] Two Jack-O'-Greens
- [2] Plough-boys with plough.
- [3] Sowers.
- [4] Reapers.

*Here the play-actors enact a scene from the old play of "Noah's Flood."

[5] Wagon, drawn by several yoke of oxen, carrying the tree.

[6] Milkmaids.

[7] Blacksmiths.

[8] Wheelwrights.

[9] Carpenters.

[10] Butchers.

[11] Shoemakers.

[1] Hidden in bushes of green, surmounted by a May Garland.

[2] White smocks, patched with pictures, in red and black cloth, representing farm-animals. Hats covered with flowers, their plough smothered with ribbons and flowers.

[3] Carrying baskets of grain, pretending to sow.

[4] With reaping hooks or sickles.

[5] Wagon and oxen decorated with greenery and ribbons, the horns of the oxen with flowers. The carters, who walk on either side of the wagon, wear broad-brimmed hats, short smocks, breeches, all covered with ribbons and flowers, and carry whips or goads similarly decorated, with which they urge on the oxen.

[6] Carrying pails and dishes; wearing short dresses, and sun-hats or bonnets, all covered with flowers and ribbons.

[7] With bare heads, leathern aprons, carrying implements of trade—hammers, anvils, tongs.

[8] Carrying or rolling wheels.

[9] With saws, planes, tools, etc.

[10] Wearing blue blouses, carrying marrow bones and cleavers, and clashing them as they march.

When the wagon reaches the May-pit, the procession halts. The tree is ceremonially removed, ivy, laurels, and other greenery wound round it spirally, a large bunch of flowers placed at the top, and then, in dead silence, solemnly raised to position. Directly this is accomplished, the spectators raise a great shout and repeat it three times: "The Pole is up."

5: ELECTION OF MAY QUEEN, AND MAY POLE DANCE

The men disperse in groups and, after some discussion and altercation, proceed in a body to the woman of their choice, present her with a wreath of May blossom, with ribbon streamers and rosettes for her dress, and escort her to a raised mound of grass where every one may see her. She is kissed "under the green" by the men, amid much laughter and merriment. The woman chosen is a regular "man's girl," jolly and of a romping kind, quite different from the conventional May Queen.

A large group is formed round the May pole in a ring, alternately men and women, and all take hands. The May pole dance is then performed—"Sellenger's Round" and "Gathering Peascods."

6: HOBBY HORSE AND PADSTOW MAY SONG

The hobby horse is made in the following way: A wooden hoop, about 3 feet in diameter, is covered with black canvas with a hole in the centre, about the size of a man's head. The canvas is edged with red and white ribbon round the circumference, and depends from the edges about 4 feet like a curtain. The hoop is then placed on a man's shoulders, his head, hidden in a tall conical mask of many colors, passing through a hole in the centre of the canvas, the curtain hiding his body and legs. In the front of the hoop is a long, slender horse's head, made of wood, and at the back of the hoop is attached a curly horse's tail about 18 inches long. The horse is accompanied by the "Club-man" who is dressed in black, covered with rosettes and bows of colored ribbon, and wears a grotesque mask similar to that of the hobby horse. Throughout the proceedings, he faces the Horse and dances backward, holding in his right hand a stout, nobbed club, about 18 to 24 inches in length, colored like the mask.

The hobby horse enters from the left Interlude Gate, escorted by six or eight couples of men, gaily dressed and decorated with flowers, singing the May song, in which the assembled spectators join. As they make their appearance, the crowd runs out, meets them, and surrounds them in a ring, in the middle of which the horse and its attendant dance, the former every now and again dashing out and trying to catch one of the maidens, who, with much laughter, usually succeeds in avoiding his clumsy embraces. When the tune has been sung a few times, a slight pause is made, the horse sinks down with his head on the ground, the club-man drops on one knee and places his club on the horse's nose, while the crowd sing very solemnly the dirge-like strain, "O Where is St. George?" At the conclusion of this, a slight pause is made and then the riotous May song is suddenly taken up and the dance resumed. This may be repeated once or twice, when the proceedings are interrupted by the entrance of the

7: MORRIS DANCERS

The dancers, all of them men, are 16 in number and are accompanied by a King and Queen, Witch and Fool, and Hobby horses. The Witch and Fool head the procession, the former with his broom, and the latter with his stick, fox's tail, and bladder clearing the way. The King and Queen march at the head of the Morris dancers, the King beating time with his sword. The Hobby horses prance round and aid the Witch and Fool in clearing a passage. The dancers move forward, dancing the "Winster Processional Dance." When the procession has reached a good position in the centre, the tune changes and without pause the dancers perform the "Winster Morris Reel," "The Old Woman Tossed up in a Blanket."

For the dresses of the dancers see photographs in The Morris Book [parts II and III]. The Witch is a man dressed in bedraggled woman's clothes, with face blackened, and carries a short besom. The Fool has a pork-pie hat covered with flowers and feathers, tunic, to the hips, of bright multi-colored stuff edged with silver fringe, buckskin breeches, stockings of odd colors, and bells round the ankles. He carries a stick with a fox's tail at one end and a bladder at the other. Sometimes he has a dinner-bell attached to the middle of his back. The King and Queen are serious characters, the latter being represented by a man dressed in woman's clothes. The King carries a sword and should be dressed in the military dress of the period: the Queen is grandly dressed, with a touch of comic extravagance, in the garb of a court lady of the period. The Hobby horses—say half a dozen in number—are of the "tournament" variety, and carry sticks and bladders.

8: COUNTRY DANCES AND RECESSIONAL

When the Morris dance is finished, the company disperses and amuses itself for a while until the pipe-and-taborers make their appearance. This is a signal for every one to find a partner for a country dance. Groups are formed all over the ground and "The Black Nag" is performed, followed by a Longways dance, e. g., "Row well, ye mariners." On the conclusion of the latter, the dancers, who are already in processional formation, dance off the ground to the "Helston Ferry Processional Dance," disappearing in different groups through the several exits.

EPILOGUE

As performed at the New York production, 1916

Where Prospero points, the Spirit of Time rises from the Yellow Sands.

Calling upon the Children of Men, she says, though their lives are like seabirds driven by the tempest, yet from her founts of life, the fecundity of love outlives and overcomes the powers of destruction.

“So out of War uplooms unconquered Art:

Blind forces rage, but Masters rise to mould them!

Soldiers and kings depart;

Time's artists—still behold them.”

As the Spirit of Time ceases to speak, the light passes to the entrances of the ground circle, where now enters the final Pageant of the great Theatres of the World—from the ancient Theatre of Dionysus to the Comédie Française. Led by standard bearers with distinctive banners, all of the Participants of the Interludes return in national groups of the Art of the Theatre, and range themselves beneath and before Prospero.

During this processional, War and his hosts disappear in darkness. Ranged in a vast ensemble of varied color the pageants of Art are massed on the Yellow Sands and

Dreams of the world!—behold
How they glister the night with their cloth of gold
Where the spirits dance on the yellow sands
And the children of earth clasp hands!”

At this close of the Masque, the orchestral accompaniment continues, and passes into the strains of the national anthem, in which all the assembled Pageant, Participants and the Spectators in the audience join.

THE MUSIC OF CALIBAN

BY ARTHUR FARWELL

The music of "Caliban" has been composed by Arthur Farwell.

His aim in the present instance is to carry out in the musical aspects of the drama what he conceives to have been the poet's intention in the poem itself, namely, to present living and timely ideas and meanings. He has thus been nowise concerned with arriving at historical musical values, except in the "Interludes," which have a historical character.

Several characteristic themes have been employed, notably those of Prospero (1) and Setebos (2).

The master-soul, Prospero, and the primitive god Setebos represent opposing principles. Prospero commands the powers of both the higher and lower spheres; his motive is a trumpet call which descends an octave and returns. It is in harmony with the higher spheres and in dissonance with the lower. The Setebos motive is the opposite—in harmony with the lower, in dissonance with the higher spheres.

Caliban's theme (3) is uncouth, boisterous, and passionate. In extended form it accompanies his first entrance, and is treated in a playful manner when Caliban is dressed by the Muses.

Miranda has a theme (4) of flowing and graceful character, heard softly through Ariel's speech during which he first describes her.

"Come unto these yellow sands," a setting of the poem from "The Tempest," is representative of the freedom of Ariel and his spirits. It is first sung by them while they are still imprisoned in the "belly of Setebos," but on this occasion is drowned out by the roaring of Setebos spirits. The melody occurs at various times throughout the action.

A dirge (7) of pallid and lugubrious character accompanies the coming of the puritanical aspects of the epoch standing between the Renaissance and the present time. It characterizes "Death," one of the priests of Setebos.

Compositions of large dimensions in the Masque are the "Roman Orgy and Vision of the Cross" at the end of Act I, and "War," at the end of Act III, both of which introduce "Setebos" choruses.

For the Historical Interludes the composer has in some instances composed music, as in the case of the Greek chorus, "Many are the wonders of time," but in general has drawn it from various sources and epochs. There are upward of one hundred scores, great and small, in the drama.

5 Moderately.

Come out thou yellow sands — and then take hands!

6 Majestically

Glo-ry and tri-um-phy, Splendor of de-vine —

7 Very slow and dismal.

Gray - gray - gray - joy be un-holy and hidden

PRESS COMMENTS ON THE PRODUCTION OF "CALIBAN" AT NEW YORK, MAY, 1916

New York took a long step ahead of the rest of the dramatic world last night with the presentation of Percy MacKaye's Masque, "Caliban."

Nothing quite so magnificent has ever been shown in this city or in the country. For the first time in the history of the arts of the theatre it is America that has evolved a new dramatic form, as potential in its way as any of the products of modern Europe. A New York poet, aided by fellow-artists and the men, women, and children of this big and busy city, conceived and visualized for 15,000 spectators at a single performance a pageant drama that will accomplish but half its purpose if it fails to revolutionize the theatre and dramatic art in many of its aspects. Purely as a community undertaking, the production of "Caliban" was unique.

The Masque would have been a tremendous success if all the seats in the Stadium, which had been doubled for the purpose, had remained empty.

We have seen the Russian Ballet, the colorful dance drama, combining music, movement, and color; we have seen the Greek classics revived in a new manner by Granville Barker in the big outdoors; we have had an Isadora Duncan Dionysian festival indoors; we have seen the wonderful art of Joseph Urban; we have, in short, followed the new workers in the theatre in all their brilliant achievements, but last night an audience saw for the first time a coördination of all these forces—a production that combined within its scope all that is best in the work of the creators of beauty in the theatre. It was a true history of the arts of the theatre, in which all these arts in their most improved forms were employed; yet the Masque had a form and method all its own. That is why “Caliban” is unique, and that is why its creator, Percy MacKaye, stands to-day as the foremost worker in the American theatre, a man who cannot be ignored henceforth in recording the evolution of the art of the theatre.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The 15,000 persons who journeyed from every corner of the city at sundown to the vast open-air theatre on the Heights, found prepared for them there an extraordinary pageant, a spectacle of memorable beauty. The staggering undertaking had been carried through with no visible mishaps worth mentioning. The Masque is a success, and remains a notable achievement. It was a fine thing to have done. It is an unforgettable thing to see.—New York Times.

In scope, in beauty, and in large significance it fulfilled and surpassed all that had been promised for it. With almost magical effects its scenes and actions reached back into the cycles and centuries of antiquity, and voiced or visualized them for the awed thousands in the audience. Something of the majesty of a ceremonial entered into the enactment of this classic Masque; the multitudes participating broadened it into a carnival fête; a play it was, an epical drama, in which antiquity and modernity joined hands and danced upon the “yellow sands” of now, within the outward circle of eternity.—New York Morning Telegraph.

It was little less than a stroke of genius to blend a basic allegory of the human soul with the majestic movement of drama through the civilized ages.

Such an achievement is surely a foretaste of the eventual realization of the democratic ideal, when art will be made not only for the people, but also by the people, and all the people will coöperate to make the common life more beautiful until the communal life itself shall become a living work of art.—New York American.

The wonderful pageants of the interludes are sights never to be forgotten. No one who cares a whit for the art of the theatre should fail to see this most remarkable community masque.—New York Evening Sun.

The story and plot are simplicity itself.

The attendance at the "Caliban" performances at the City College Stadium raises the question of enlarging the Stadium for similar community uses in the future. That this vast shrine of athletic sports should have been rendered inadequate not by football but by the production of drama and pageantry is a curious outcome.—New York World.

The production proved remarkably successful for the manner in which it fulfilled its function of being a community masque, enlisting the services of people from every section of the city, geographically and socially, and in the matter of obtaining public support.

It is estimated that 135,000 persons had seen the Masque. The demand for seats had been so great that several extra performances were added.—New York Times.

"The most wonderful spectacle I have ever seen," said my companion as, engulfed in the crowd, we moved slowly out of the Stadium.

"Caliban: By the Yellow Sands" should be given again and again. To the stadiums and the parks of our democracy "Caliban" will, I hope, introduce a form of entertainment equaling in popularity and surpassing in beauty and wholesomeness the vast spectacles of the Roman Coliseum.—Ernest Hamlin Abbott, in The Outlook.

And out there in the starlight at the Stadium, under the open sky and in the amphitheatre, black with people, and the great arc lights flashing on the three stages of the pageant as community group after community group passed in review—the Pan-Hellenic League, the East Side settlements, the Greenwich Villagers, the Bronx district, the schools, the representatives of all races, classes, and conditions in the great city—I saw the benignant ghost of Steele MacKaye looking down on his dream come true through his son.—Henry E. Dixey, in the Chicago Sunday Herald.

It ranks in the field of spirit with the epoch-making inventions in the field of material things.

Percy MacKaye has linked the pageant ambition with an ambition no less than Hellenic—in the mood of Plato and Sophocles.—John Collier, in The Survey.

The production deserves to be recorded as a civic event of almost unexampled magnitude, achieved by the concerted effort of all classes of a great community. Mr. MacKaye has succeeded in achieving the apparently impossible.—Clayton Hamilton, in Vogue.

The Masque leaves immense impressions on my mind. It is in effect inspiring, gigantic, grand. One's reflections broadly encompass a picture of the evolution of man from his brutish nature to the appreciation of the power of love in its highest by the civilization conceived by art.

Two hours or more of beautiful visions, of beautiful trysts. To many present its inspiration was akin to the good to the human soul of a great and glorious religious picture of pageant upon pageant such as no one man alone has ever seen, yet such as this old world has borne—harmonious color and movement, samplers of physique and soul, which we apprehend is man's true birthright, created by him, built upon the apprehension that something burned within him that would make him greater than the brutes!

One might take one's eyes from the pageantry without losing its effect: crescents of colors, with 18,000 human beings in full view; the blue, star-dented sky, the rays of blue, amber, and gold, and pink from the lighting towers, the hush and reverent expectancy of that spellbound, multitudinous audience, a gentle breeze to fan the garments of the players into graceful folds, the ring, thunder, and echo of the actors' voices, all spoke of the potency and beauty of humanity.—St. Clair Bayfield, in The Stage, London.

Aside from the sumptuousness of its actual physical presentation upon the stage, there is a blinding glory in the very conception of the magnificent Masque, "Caliban," devised and written by Percy MacKaye.

The Masque is a structure of music, light, dance, acting, song, scenic values, pantomime—the whole builded into a monument of dramatic art that lifts as the apex of its upward-pushing pyramid the "spoken word."—Review of Reviews.

There is now no longer any question that Mr. MacKaye's conception of community art is established in America.—The New Republic.

In the bowl of the Stadium of the City College of New York, lighted with the glare of powerful lights, an audience of 15,000 people gathered last night to see Percy MacKaye's Shakespeare Masque, the largest dramatic representation ever given in this city. For hours before "Caliban: By the Yellow Sands" began, crowds poured from the subway, drove up in automobiles, and arrived on busses, filling the streets and filing slowly into the great open-air theatre. They came from all parts of the city, from the East Side and West Side, and some even from Boston and Philadelphia. Clouds had lifted, revealing a clear, star-lit night.

Slowly the white of the Stadium and the gleam of the scaffolding disappeared as black figures took their places, until the amphitheatre was filled with a huge crowd, expectant, motionless.—New York Evening Post.

New York City Shakespeare Tercentenary Celebration

CIVIC ORGANIZATION

MISS MARY PORTER BEEGLE, Chairman

MRS. AXEL O. IHLENG, Executive Secretary

10 EAST 43D STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Telephone, Murray Hill 9745

Supplementary Celebrations

MISS KATE OGLEBAY, Chairman

MISS FERN CLAWSON, Vice-Chairman

Advisory on Forms of Celebrations

MISS JOSEPHINE BEIDERHASE

MISS FRANCES E. CLARKE

MR. ARTHUR FARWELL

MR. WM. CHAUNCEY LANGDON

MISS AZUBAH LATHAM

MISS CONSTANCE MACKAY

Chairman of Finance

MR. W. FORBES MORGAN, JR.

Executive Chairman

MR. EVERARD THOMPSON

Masque Committee Chairman

MRS. SIMEON FORD

Music

MR. HARRY BIRNBAUM

Organizing Director of the Masque

Mr. GARNET HOLME

Telephone, Greeley 1137

Board of Directors

PROF. ALLAN ABBOTT

MISS MARY PORTER BEEGLE

DR. WILLIAM E. BOHN

CRANSTON BRENTON

JOHN COLLIER

MISS LAURA SEDGWICK COLLINS

MRS. AUGUST DREYER

MAX EASTMAN

MRS. WILLIAM EINSTEIN

MRS. SIMEON FORD

MRS. DANIEL GUGGENHEIM

DR. GEORGE F. KUNZ

HOWARD KYLE

MISS OLIVIA LEVENTRITT

MRS. PHILIP M. LYDIG

W. FORBES MORGAN, JR.

MRS. M. FAIRCHILD OSBORN

MISS FLORENCE OVERTON

REV. DR. JOSEPH SILVERMAN

PROF. EDMUND BRONK SOUTHWICK

MR. M. J. STROOCK

MR. EVERARD THOMPSON

MRS. J. NORMAN DE R. WHITEHOUSE

THE SHAKESPEARE CELEBRATION

will present

in the Lewisohn Stadium of the College of the City of New York on the nights of May 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 1916, at Eight O'clock

The Community Masque

CALIBAN

By the Yellow Sands

PRODUCTION STAFF

Author and Director

PERCY MACKAYE

Composer and Director of Music

ARTHUR FARWELL

Producers

JOSEPH URBAN

RICHARD ORDYNSKI

Designer of Inner Scenes

ROBERT EDMOND JONES

Director of Interludes

GARNET HOLME

Director of Costumes

MRS. JOHN W. ALEXANDER

Director of Dances

MRS. ROBERT ANDERSON

Staff Assistant

HAZEL MACKAYE

Office of the Director: 529 Marbridge Bldg. (34th St. & 6th Ave.);
telephone, Greeley 1137.

For particulars regarding Tickets, etc., communication should be made with the office of the Shakespeare Celebration, 10 East 43d St., New York.
Telephones, Murray Hill 9745 and 4158.

THE MAYOR'S HONORARY COMMITTEE

For the New York Shakespeare Celebration

OTTO H. KAHN, Chairman.

HERBERT ADAMS
DR. FELIX ADLER
JACOB P. ADLER
JOHN G. AGAR
ROBERT AITKEN
WINTHROP AMES
DONN BARBER
JOSEPH BARONDESS
MRS. AUGUST BELMONT
GUTZON BORGLUM
CHANCELLOR ELMER E. BROWN
HENRY BRUERE
ARNOLD BRUNNER
PRES. NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER
ABRAHAM CAHAN
MRS. WILLIAM ASTOR CHANDLER
WILLIAM M. CHASE
JOSEPH H. CHOATE
THOMAS W. CHURCHILL
PAUL D. CRAVATH
JOHN D. CRIMMINS
GEORGE CROMWELL
R. FULTON CUTTING
WALTER DAMROSCH
R. S. DAVIS
HENRY P. DAVISON
ROBT. W. DEFOREST
MRS. CAMDEN C. DIKE
A. J. DITTENHOEFER
CLEVELAND H. DODGE
CAROLINE B. DOW
FRANK L. DOWLING
MRS. H. EDWARD DREIER
MAX EASTMAN
SAMUEL H. EVINS
JOHN H. FINLEY
NED ARDEN FLOOD
DANIEL C. FRENCH
CHARLES DANA GIBSON
BERTRAM C. GOODHUF
RT. REV. DAVID H. (-REER)
JULES GUERIN
MRS. DANIEL GUGGENHEIM
MRS. BENJAMIN GUINNESS
NORMAN HAPGOOD
MRS. J. BORDEN HARRIMAN
WILLIAM LAUREL HARRIS
COL. GEORGE HARVEY
TIMOTHY HEALY
A. BARTON HEPBURN
MORRIS HILLQUIT
JAMES P. HOLLAND

REV. JOHN HAYNES HOLMES
FREDERIC C. HOWE
ARTHUR CURTISS JAMES
MRS. PAUL KENNADAY
DR. J. J. KINDRED
DARWIN P. KINGSLEY
LEE KOHNS
DR. GEORGE F. KUNE
THOMAS W. LAMONT
DR. HENRY M. LEIPSIGER
ADOLPH LEWISOHN
M. J. LAVELLE, V.G.
WALTER LIPPMANN
PHILIP LYDIG
CLARENCE H. MACKAY
MISS ELIZABETH MARBURY
EDWIN MARKHAM
MISS HELEN MAROT
DR. BRANDER MATTHEWS
REV. HOWARD MELIEN
DR. APFLETON MORGAN
J. P. MORGAN
DR. HENRY MOSKOWITZ
ADOLPH S. OCHS
RALPH PULITZER
PERCY R. PYNE, 2d
W. C. REICK
ELIHU ROOT
EDWARD A. RUMELY
JACOB M. SCHIFF
MORTIMER L. SCHIFF
JAMES SPEYER
FRANCIS LYNDE STETSON
FREDERIC A. STOKES
J. G. PHELPS STOKES
JOSEF STRANSKY
OSCAR S. STRAUS
AUGUSTUS THOMAS
LOUIS UNTERMEYER
MRS. WILLIAM K. VANDERBILT
OSWALD GARRISON VILLARD
MISS LILLIAN D. WALD
DR. JAMES J. WALSH
CABOT WARD
J. ALDEN WEIR
CHARLES D. WETMORE
EDWARD J. WHEELER
F. W. WHITRIDGE
THOMAS W. WHITTLE
GEORGE WICKERSHAM
WILLIAM G. WILLCOX
DR. STEPHEN S. WISE
H. J. WRIGHT

THE COUNTRY LIFE PRESS
GARDEN CITY, N. Y.

7

By Percy MacKaye

CALIBAN: By the Yellow Sands

The Shakespeare Tercentenary Masque

This is the masque which was given to immense out-door audiences in New York as the climax of the great popular festival in honor of Shakespeare in 1916. It has since been produced all over the country.

"Gorgeous as the performance is to behold, this masque of Percy MacKaye's has a meaning and a beauty, apart from that magnificence which strikes the eye, that is to be realized fully only in the reading. Percy MacKaye has rendered to Shakespeare fairly the sole tribute of the Tercentenary worthy its purpose."—THE BELLMAN

Cloth, Net, $1.25. Illustrated.

Saint Louis: A Civic Masque

This masque was performed in 1914, at the celebration commemorating the 150th anniversary of the founding of Saint Louis in which representatives from the great cities of the two Americas took part.

Frontispiece. Net, $1.00

A Thousand Years Ago

Volume II in The Drama League Series of Plays

Mr. MacKaye has chosen an old tale from the Arabian Nights and in the foreground is his group of merry Italian Comedians. A delightful entertainment this—and a play of great historical interest besides, since its pedigree goes back to Italian drama of the 18th century.

"Delightful to read—romantic and poetic and written in the happiest of comedy veins."

—NEW YORK GLOBE

With an introduction by Clayton Hamilton

Net, 75 cents. Bound in Boards

OTHER TITLES IN THE DRAMA LEAGUE SERIES OF PLAYS

Kindling—KENYON

The Great Galeoto—ECHEGARAY

The Sunken Bell—HAUPTMANN

Mary Goes First—JONES

Her Husband's Wife—THOMAS

Change—FRANCIS

Marta of the Lowlands—GUIMERA

Patriot—SARDOU

The Thief—BERNSTEIN

My Lady's Dress—KNOBLAUCH

The Trail of the Torch—HERVIEU

A Woman's Way—BUCHANAN

Hobson's Choice—BRIGHOUSE

The Apostle—LOYSON

Youth—HALBE

A False Saint—CUREL

The Mothers—HIRSCHFELD

Malvaloca—SERAFIN and JOAQUIN AL-VAREZ QUINTERO

Washington Square Plays

(Other Volumes to Follow)

Net 75 cents. Each Bound Attractively in Brown Boards

Publications of DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & CO. Garden City, N. Y.

3 2044 051 106 995

THE BORROWER WILL BE CHARGED
AN OVERDUE FEE IF THIS BOOK IS NOT RETURNED TO THE LIBRARY ON OR BEFORE THE LAST DATE STAMPED
BELOW. NON-RECEIPT OF OVERDUE
NOTICES DOES NOT EXEMPT THE BORROWER FROM OVERDUE FEES.

WIDENER
BOOK DUE CANCELLED
FEB JUN 3 1985
1347471 3 1985

WIDENER
BOOK DUE
CANCELLED
APR 29 1986
1898854

WIDENER
WIDENER
JUN 11 2000
JUL 06 2001
CANCELLED
BOOK DUE

